DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.
PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

On the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each Chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

PREFACE.

PREFACE.

The reputation of Roger of Hoveden as an indepen- The condent historian rests almost entirely on the last of the cladine por four divisions into which, in the earlier volumes of this chronicle to edition, his chronicle has been resolved. This division cartribibutled extends from the spring of the year 1192 to the winter $\begin{gathered}\text { Lo Rogerer } \\ \text { Hovelen }\end{gathered}$ of the year 1201, and fills the latter half of the third and the whole of the present fourth volume. It may be as well to remind the reader that the only one of the earlier divisions, the authorship of which cannot be certainly accounted for otherwise than by ascribing it to Hoveden, the portion that extends from 1148 to 1169, covers a period too remote from the date at which the work assumed its present form, to allow any special value to be ascribed to the personal recollections of the writer, even supposing that writer to have been Hoveden ; whilst it is not by any means improbable that in the general search for historical manuscripts which is now being carried on, some materials may be discovered which will account quite differently for the original authorship of the second, as certainly as has been already done for that of the first and third divisions of the work. It is not, however, at all likely that such will be the case with the fourth division. If Roger of Hoveden wrote anything at all, and if the consensus of the many existing manuscripts which ascribe the finished work to him, has any real value and significance, the history of the latter years of Richard and the carlier ones of John must be referred to him as author.

And this conclusion is supported by the little, very little indeed it is, that can be ascertained of his personal history. His position as a clerk or chaplain of Henry II., his connexion with the north of England, his employment as a justice of the forests, his probable connexion with the town of Howden, and through it with the see of Durham and the family of Hugh de Puiset,-that is, all that can be said to be known about him during the years that are the subject of the latter portion of the chronicle,-will be found to agree very well with the hypothesis that ascribes to him the authorship of a work of which so large a part is devoted to the history of the see of York, in which so much prominence is given to the fortunes of the bishop of Durham and his family, and in which the few local and incidental notices that are peculiar to it belong so frequently to the neighbourhood from which the supposed writer took his name. ${ }^{1}$

It may further be said that these few points not only are all that can be guessed about Roger of Hoveden, but touch very nearly everything that is distinctive in the chronicle. The abundant supply of valuable public documents is just what might be expected in a compilation made by a clerk of the king's court. The special fulness of the articles connected with the forest jurisdiction is in complete accord with the fact that the chronicler was a justice of the forests; his severity in remarking on the cruelty of that jurisdiction, ${ }^{2}$ if we consider that it becomes apparent at the time at which he is known to have ceased to hold the office of justice, is rather confirmative of the hypothesis than inconsistent with it; and the same may be said of the occasional sharpness with which he rebukes the secular employ-

[^1]ments of the superior clergy. ${ }^{1}$ If more were known of Hoveden's life, it would doubtless be possible to discover in similar small coincidences additional grounds for maintaining his title to the authorship.

Where so little that is certain can be advanced, it Inference may seem unwise to rely on inferences; but the same conclusion does seem to be drawn from a consideration personal f the be dis- to of the few places in which the writer or compiler allows coverert in a glimpse of his personal character to be caught. The only note of character in the book is that tendency to the marvellous on which remark has been made more than once in the prefaces to the earlier volumes. ${ }^{2}$ This note, which in a mediæval historian is, of course, far from being a striking peculiarity, will be found on examination to mark a sort of unity in the method of treatment apparent throughout the work, and further to localize the authorship. The hand that introduced into the matter of fact story of the Durham and Worcester annalists, the miracles of Edward the Confessor, ${ }^{3}$ that struck at every opportunity the string of the miraculous apparent in the story of the martyr of Canterbury, that added new terrors and horrors to the sins and mysteries of the emperor Henry V., ${ }^{4}$ is doubtless the same that reported, on the authority of abbot Eustace, the neglected warning sent to Henry II. when he spared the heretics of Guienne, ${ }^{5}$ and that placed amongst the most precious recollections of contemporary history the miracles wrought by the same abbot Eustace in support of his preaching of the sanctity of the Lord's day. ${ }^{6}$ This spirit of credulity marks some of the most important additions made in this compilation to the earlier writers ; it runs through the whole work, and is indeed the only characteristic of the kind that does so ; it increases in intensity in the fourth and last portion ; and in its fullest development localizes the writer in the neighbourhood of Howden, and the adjoining parts of Lincolnshire and the East Riding of Yorkshire. The argument may be taken for what it is worth. If the question be put, Are we to regard the consensus of the manuscripts as to Hoveden's authorship conclusive, or is the certainty that he was not the original author of the first and third divisions to afford a ground for disbelieving that he wrote the fourth? it may be safely advanced, in support of the evidence of the manuscripts, that there is a distinct mark of unity of manipulation throughout, that that mark is more distinct than elsewhere in the fourth portion, and that it not only serves to determine the unity of the compiler, but to fix definitively the place in which we are to look for him, as the town which gives name to the reputed author in the most authoritative manuscripts. Simply stated, it is a presumption that Roger of Hoveden compiled the whole book, and that the latter portion is more peculiarly his own.

A brief recapitulation of the passages which convey this impression will be sufficient. The only important addition made by Hoveden to the "Historia post Bedam" or "Liber Dunelmensis," on which the first portion of the work is based, is the account of the visions and miracles of Edward the Confessor. ${ }^{1}$ The minor additions are, however, marked by a similar motive, the grant of Brakenholm and Hemmingburgh to Durham; an abstract of which is given, ${ }^{2}$ is plainly regarded as suggested by the miraculous panic of William the Conqueror when outraging the relics of S . Cuthbert; the charter of archbishop Thomas inserted under the year $1083^{3}$ [^3]was also the result of a vision of S . Cuthber't and a Credulity miraculous cure that followed it; the passages touching inp writurs the filial impiety and disappearance of Henry V. tell tionens onl the same tale. 1 the story the the same tale; the story of the sickness and death of dilhirs, in archbishop Thomas II., ${ }^{2}$ whilst it is probably true, is of a of the work. character specially dear to the professional hagiographer. These passages, with the exception of the particulars about Henry V., have a local bearing as well. Hemmingburgh and Brakenholm were attached to the see of Durham by a similar tie to that of Howden itself; the result of archbishop Thomas I.'s vision was to liberate the Yorkshire churches appurtenant to the see of Durham from the usual exactions, and of these Howden was one; the death of Thomas II. took place at Beverley.

In the second portion of the work it may suffice to Instances point out the fact that the only transactions which are second pordwelt on with any detail are those connected with Thomas Becket, who had, before the work was undertaken, arrived at the full dimensions of the popular saint of the day. The general tenour of the history appears indeed to be modified by the writer's prepossessions as a courtier ; but the archbishop's escape from Northampton castle is expressly referred to a special providence, ${ }^{3}$ and in the relation of the martyrdom and the events that preceded it, the additions to the simpler story of the earlier biographers have a special colouring. The supernatural warning vouchsafed to Becket at Sens, ${ }^{4}$ the story of the water changed to wine at the pope's table, ${ }^{5}$ the revelation to S. Godric of Finchale, on the the day of the murder; ${ }^{6}$ and the record, probably entirely unhistorical, of the fate of the murderers, ${ }^{7}$ which are, strictly speaking; additions by Hoveden to the text of

In the third portion of the chronicle, the following additions to Benedict, over and above those connected with the martyrdom, illustrate this point : the story of the captured hare, which, on Henry's landing in Ireland, presaged his victory over the natives; ${ }^{1}$ the additional details of Henry's Canterbury pilgrimage in $1174 ;{ }^{2}$ the vision of Walter, the servant of Eustace of Flay, ${ }^{3}$ already referred to ; the story of the woman in labour succoured by the devil, which may possibly be the origin of the proverb applied to the birth of illegitimate children, that the devil is the best midwife ; ${ }^{4}$ the vision of the gigantic expansion of the cross at the battle of Ramlah; ${ }^{5}$ the reference, in recording the burial of Henry II., to the prophecy that he should "be veiled " among the veiled women ;" ${ }^{\text {" }}$ the additions to the conversation of Richard and Joachim on the Apocalypse, ${ }^{7}$ of the life of Antichrist by Adso, ${ }^{8}$ and the curious article on the same subject falteringly ascribed to S. cles wrought at Beverley, Nafferton, and Wakefield. ${ }^{1}$ This, which is far the most extraordinary illustration of superstitious credulity in the whole work, occurs very nearly at the close of it ; and the scenes of it lie within reach of Howden.

Such are the grounds, affording basis for something more than a presumption, of the hypothesis which I have stated above. They are indeed slight in themselves, nor do they serve to do more than establish a difference in character between Hoveden and the writer whose work he was continuing. That earlier writer is singularly free from the gossiping credulity which is common to the writers of the period, even to those who, like Walter de Mapes and Giraldus Cambrensis, might be supposed too well acquainted with the process of fabricating myths to be easily imposed on by the vulgar retailer of miracles. Here, however, we have to contrast Hoveden, not with the general run of the writers of his time, but with this one in particular. The vestiges of this common tendency in our author's treatment lead the way to a further and more important question.
How far the narration of miracles affects the credibility of the narrator.

The question how far does the recording of supernatural visions and miracles affect the general credibility of the authors who report them, is one which concerns to a very considerable extent mediæval history in general. The day is happily past when such stories were regarded as consciously purposed impostures; we can now afford to look upon them as part of the current popular belief in a majority of the races and generations of the world, and that in so great a degree that the authenticity of a writer might fairly be doubted, who was alleged as a mediæval historian and did not relate mediæval wonders. And this remark applies not merely to religious or ecclesiastical miracles, but to such portents as the green children who emerged from fairy land into

[^7]East Anglia, ${ }^{1}$ and the discovery of living dogs and Prevalence toads in hermetically sealed beds of rock. ${ }^{2}$ If William nirimeulous of Newburgh, the most independent thinker in thestories whole list of our mediæval historians, found himself compelled by the mass of evidence laid before him, and by the authority of his witnesses, to accord a reluctant belief to such prodigies, we can scarcely wonder that the ordinary chronicler relating what from day to day reached his ear and seemed worth recording, should report constantly the occurrence of events which he, in common with the whole of his contemporaries, believed to be special interpositions of Divine Providence. The age of Hoveden believed in the constant infraction, by Divine authority, of the ordinary processes of the course of this world, for the purpose of honouring the relics of a large number of saints and martyrs, and of benefiting the poor and sick, clearing the character of the innocent accused, or protesting against the wickedness of the times, by the overflow as it were of the benignant influences of those holy persons. How such a state of belief came to be usual it is not our place now to inquire ; it must be granted that it did prevail, and whilst such occurrences were sufficiently far removed from ordinary experience to compel notice, little misgiving was felt as to the genuineness of the relation, and no doubt entertained as to the origin of the interposition. Further than this, the belief in this constant exercise of miraculous power was closely connected with the habit of referring everything of the nature of unexpected coincidence to the same sort of special providence. Owing to this interpretation, great numbers Coincidences of events and phænomena are included in the class of remanded as of events and phænomena are included in the class of supermiracles, which are capable of simple explanation, or natural. suggestive of much more familiar agencies than the special exertion of Divine power. And of course it fol-

[^8]lows that where every unexpected coincidence is regarded as miraculous and contributes its quota of verisimiiitude to the general stock of wonders, a large number of stories that are not to be so easily explained, gains a credence to which by itself it has no such title.

The good faith of a writer impaired only when he declares himself an eyewitness of an impossible event.

More than good faith requisite for credibility.

The common sense of mankind will, I think, sanction this rule, that the general good faith of a historical writer is not impaired by his recording prodigies which were believed in his own days, except where he professes himself to have witnessed events which we believe to be impossible. But the question concerns more than general good faith; it affects his general credibility ; we require in him not merely honesty but discernment, and ask not simply did he believe what he wrote down, but was his judgment sound enough to make his ordinary narration trustworthy, or were his opportunities of gaining information so good that only common honesty was needed to qualify him for the character of a historian?

Deeply rooted prevalence of superstition.

Any one who has ever in personal experience struck across the deep and secret vein of popular belief in witchcraft, or who has watched the more refined circles of so-called spiritualism, will allow that neither natural shrewdness and simplicity, nor thorough honesty, nor enlightened education, is an effective hindrance to the belief in the frequent occurrence of events that the great majority of educated men regard as incredible, or in the reference to supernatural power, of phænomena which no small portion of that majority considers to be the result of imposture. The ploughboy who loses his watch applies to the wise woman to consult the stars on his behalf, or to furnish a spell to enchant the thief. The thief fearing to fall under the influence of the charm restores the stolen treasure. No one doubts the truth of the relation which may be easily tested; the very belief in the powers of the witch has wrought the result, which spreads through the country side, and bases on ascertain- Comparison able fact, a doctrine which neither priest nor school of modern can overthrow. The mediæval habit of referring such ${ }^{\text {val forms, }}$ things to miracle is at the least less degrading than the modern belief in witchcraft or necromancy; doubtless where there was conscious imposture the sin was proportionably greater ; but where there was not, the devout simplicity of the vulgar mind, the unquestioning belief in ever-present benignant influences mistakenly identified, is worthy of compassionate pity rather than of contempt. It must be remembered that in many of the branches of knowledge the mind of a monk of the twelfth century was not in any respect better furnished than that of a modern rustic ${ }^{1}$. His experience of the world was as narrow, his power of discriminating between coincidences and prodigies as limited, his ability of weighing evidence on the subject of physical phænomena not more exercised. When we deal with secular writers such as Roger of Hoveden was, we find a greater weight of experience and more critical power than in a monk of the common type, but it may be doubted whether in matters of this special character the ordinary twelfth century clerk rose beyond the level of the village politician of the present day, who on the authority of his weekly newspaper gives the same credit to the quack advertisement or the gigantic gooseberry as to the telegraphed report of the Queen's speech.

But the mediæval miracle itself is not an easy matter Difficulty of to dispose of. Those cases, in the first place, which the question belong to the class of visions, such as, to take an example from our author, the appearance of the Blessed Virgin [^9]through the soil, lib. v. cap. 34; for the stifling of three men who went down into a pit in a lime kiln the writer can give no reason whatever.

Visions reputed miraculous not incredible.

Exception in the case of distinct prophecy.
to the Crusaders, ${ }^{1}$ or the miraculous warning of the death of Henry's sons, ${ }^{2}$ must at once be set by themselves. They are beyond the pale of ordinary experience, but they are not incredible as facts and impressions. A man highly excited by the work on which he is engaged, thinking by day and by night of the blessings that his exertions on behalf of Christendom are earning for him, may have, especially whilst watching and fasting, come into such a state of mind that his dreams are full of the subject of his waking thoughts, and as vivid and impressive as waking visions could be. He dreams on board his ship of the appearance of his patron saint, S. Thomas, S. Nicolas, or S. Edmund; ${ }^{3}$ or he gazes upon the crucifix until the awful figure seems to smile. ${ }^{4}$ He has seen what he believes to be a miracle; specially favoured, he would be a traitor to his faith if he did not publish it. It is recorded, and the miracle propagates ; it suggests the very details of prodigies that constantly repeat themselves. In this case the error, if there be an error, is not in the belief of the fact, but in the interpretation. And so wide is the applicability of this principle, that it will be found to cover all cases of mediæval visions which are not compromised by distinct attempts at prophecy, and such attempts are extremely rare. It cannot be safely taken for granted that the stories of such visions are false merely because they are improbable to our minds; nor can the historian who records them be contemned either as over-credulous or dishonest, so long as he contents himself with the record.
Cures reputed miraculous.

A second large class of mediæval miracles deals with the cures of disease ; and of these, exclusive of the considerable majority in which blindness or disease of the eye is healed, the largest number may be said to consist [^10]of the cures of nervous complaints, or of those in which Cures of the state of the nerves very much affects the part complaints. diseased, such as toothache and the like. Unquestionably a large number of cures may be accounted for simply on the ground of the faith of the patient in the remedy applied; ${ }^{1}$ a fact which is exemplified in the case of quack medicines at the present day by the testi- Analogy of monials printed by way of advertisement in the papers. cines. Of many of these it may, I believe, safely be affirmed that the ingredients are on analysis found to contain nothing more directly addressed to the remedy of the complaint cured, than were the blood and water furnished by the monks of Canterbury to the pilgrims of S. Thomas. Every such cure would go to swell the long list of miracles and strengthen the faith of successive generations of pilgrims. Cases in which the remedy Failures failed, or the disease returned as soon as the momentary effort was relaxed, would not be recorded, or recorded only as demonstrating the patient's want of faith. ${ }^{2}$ Where every one afflicted with neuralgia had recourse Universality to a relic, every one who recovered from it would relics. naturally ascribe his cure to the relic. Here, then, there is no question as to the facts, only as to the connexion between them.

It is probable that an analogous theory might be Cures of stat plindness. cures of blindness which are on record ${ }^{3}$ such, for instance, [^11]record occasionally such failures of miracle; lib. i. cap. 40, 41. In these two cases the failure is marked by a vision, in which the saint assures the patient that he shall not be cured.

${ }^{3}$ Forty such, if not more, are recorded among the Canterbury miracles; considerably more than a seventh part of the whole number.

Cures of blindness reputed miraculous
as those in which a patient partially blind has persuaded himself that he is entirely so, or in which the remedies used for curing the blindness of one eye have had the effect of producing a morbid sympathy in the other; or in which the strong effort made on faith in the relic has nerved the patient to realize that he was not so blind as he thought he was, and the discovery has itself been regarded as the miracle ; but it is needless to dwell on this, because in alleged cases of blindness very considerable allowance must be made for imposture, pretended disease and pretended cure. The opinion of the age set a premium on the reception of miraculous operation. The man who had been cured of blindness by a visit to the shrine of a saint would be popularly regarded as a special object of Divine care, and as such would be able to rely for the rest of his life on the charities of the monasteries, or on the piety of the devout. The practice of pilgrimage opened the way for successful mendicancy. Here again the miracle would be recorded, whilst the imposture was unsuspected; the detection of the imposture in but few cases out of the many would reach the ears of the registrar of miracles. There are, of course, other cases in which the cures may be ascribed to mere natural causes, such as the change of air and food, or the exhaustion of the disease, or its intermittent character. Complaints dependent on digestion, ${ }^{1}$ fevers, ague, and even rheumatism, which we may safely argue was occasionally described as paralysis, and diseases of the skin, would fall under this head.
Coincidences A third class of miracles is that in which results reputed miraculous. perfectly natural are recorded as supernatural because they have struck the imagination of the reporter as illustrative of a special providence. A candle at the shrine of S . Thomas is extinguished, and the gaseous

If, further, we allow something considerable for the Exaggerainfluence of local rumour, the accumulative exaggeration rimour of of oral report, and the impossibility of contradicting a false or foolish story in any proportion to the extent of belief which it has forestalled, we shall, I think, be able to grant that a sufficiently large assortment of events apparently miraculous might easily be brought to the knowledge of any annalist to warrant him in according credit both to the general proposition, in the belief of which he was probably already settled, and to the par-

[^13]The annalist ticular instance. He recorded the fact, or what was put what believes. before him as a fact, and accounted for it on the ground that was, on his theory of the government of the world, most probable.
Cases of imposture very numerous. considerable class of wonders of which it can only be said that either they were true miracles or they were blasphemous impostures, the record of which is, if true, a record of miracles, if not true, a conscious lie. There are others which on no theory of miracle can be regarded as conceivably possible, the pretending eyewitnesses of which condemn themselves, but which yet in all ages have found believers. To the first of these belong many of those recorded by such chroniclers as those who collected the miracles of S. Thomas or S. Cuthbert, in which prophetic visions are common, and the instantaneous cure of deep wounds or of such diseases as leprosy and dropsy. To the second belongs undoubtedly the story of the woman who having drunk of a blessed fountain vomited two great black toads, which immediately turned into very great and very black dogs, shortly after became asses, and finally went up into the air, leaving foul vestiges behind them. ${ }^{1}$

How such stories affect credibility.

Where the narrator, then, declares himself to have been the eyewitness of an impossible event, we can only conclude either that something did occur in his presence contrary to common experience, and that he has exaggerated it up to the dimensions of a lie; or that he has simply lied. But this is only where the recorder does profess himself to have been an eyewitness ; the belief of such things being rife, it implies neither foolishness nor falseness to have been deceived by a secondhand tale.

Both Hoveden and his predecessor, the author of the "Gesta Henrici Regis," record a number of physical [^14]phænomena which have no connexion with ecelesiastical or religious miracle. Comets, eclipses, mock suns and moons, strange appearances in the sky are duly noticed. More unusual occurrences, such as the fountain of blood running at Kilwinning, ${ }^{1}$ the rain of blood in the Isle of Wight, ${ }^{2}$ the earthquakes and landslips ${ }^{3}$ mentioned from time to time, are remarked on with the natural expression of wonder. But traveller's tales, such as that of the flying fish in the Mediterranean, ${ }^{4}$ the fishes of S. Agatha at Catania, ${ }^{5}$ the fires of S. Elmo at Messina, ${ }^{6}$ are told with more show of misgiving than the visions of the Crusaders ${ }^{7}$ or the miraculous cure of Philip II. ${ }^{8}$ They were further removed from their experience, more foreign to their mental habits, and incapable of being tested by such criterions as they were capable of applying. The story of the flying fish appeared to Hoveden so strange that he gives it with the solemn attestation, "qui hoc " vidit, testimonium perhibuit;"9 words which, borrowed as they are from the Gospel, seem to imply at once the doubt, and the strength of the evidence to which the doubt succumbed.

In another place Hoveden uses the same strong for- Was Hove mula in a way which might be interpreted to show that exe thine ens he was himself an eye-witness. "At Nafferton, a village Natherton " of Master Roger Arundel, a certain man made himself " a cake baked on the hearth on a Saturday afternoon; " and he ate of it, and kept back part of it for himself " against the morning; and when on the Lord's day " he had broken it, blood came out of it, 'and he who

Hoveden meant to say that he was himself the witness, and the distance of Nafferton from Howden is not so great as to forbid the supposition, we must conclude either that he was imposed upon, or that he was a party tation. a certainty the reference is not to himself, his credit in this instance may be saved. He shows an amount of credulity in the matter that contrasts unfavourably with the reticence of his predecessor ; he shows that for some reason or other he did yield belief to the coarse and blasphemous impostures of abbot Eustace, but not in such a marked contrast with the popular opinion of his time as to place him in point of credibility below the contemporary authors. Even the professed miracle writers can rarely be charged with perversions of facts in names, dates, and circumstances not directly involved in the miracle immediately before them; it would be unjust to question the honesty of Hoveden or the general authenticity of his narration on these grounds. Nor has the question been so argued here. Lengthy as the remarks may seem, they have a certain bearing on the authorship of the compilation in connexion with which they are introduced. ${ }^{2}$

[^16]relics were false, as such a countenancing of falsehood and imposture as cannot be believed compatible with perfect goodness. In answer to fervent prayer, even where there was very decided and debasing superstition mingled with the prayer, a miracle might conceivably be wrought, but surely not a series of unmeaning prodigies grounding and strengthening a false belief in relics of unquestionable spuriousness.

An examination of the chronological carefulness of Carelessness the compiler leads to a like conclusion. Hovede, of Hoveden sonality is to a certain degree vindicated by a sort of clironology carelessness about exact dates, which is strongly opposed $\begin{gathered}\text { teristic } \\ \text { ruming }\end{gathered}$ to the exactness and accuracy of his predecessor ; a care- through the lessness not greater than is common with his contemporaries, but which is in contrast with the work of that particular chronicler; which in the same way as his tendency to superstition runs through the whole of the work, and appears most markedly in the concluding portion. A short but summary notice of the points that illustrate this will answer a double purpose.

In the first portion of the work, Hoveden's chronology from the year 878 to 935 is all wrong. ${ }^{1}$ He has forsaken his guide, and run into so great difficulties as to be obliged to leave a gap in his computation from 924 to $935 .{ }^{2}$ His dates from 1124 to 1135 are a year before the true date; ${ }^{3}$ he has been misled by misunderstanding the arrangement of Henry of Huntingdon, and confounded regnal years with the years of the era. This error which, as I have remarked in the preface to the first volume, ${ }^{4}$ might be merely a clerical one, has some importance when we find that the same carelessness about regnal years reappears in the later portions of the work.

In the second division of the book the chronology is In the very much astray. The letters of Becket are in almost every case placed under wrong years; the death of Eustace of Boulogne is placed under 1148 instead of 1153 ; 5 the appointment of Thomas Becket to the Chancery is misdated; ${ }^{6}$ so are Henry's coronation at Worcester, ${ }^{7}$ the very important councils of Westminster ${ }^{8}$

and Northampton, ${ }^{1}$ and Henry's Welsh campaign of 1165. ${ }^{2}$ Although these are the most prominent examples, the confusion of the dates of Becket's letters renders the whole of this division so unsound in respect of arrangement, that it can only be regarded as a very second-rate authority.
In the third part of the In the third division Hoveden has generally adhered part of the work. conspicuous faults, especially in the article of additions. Most of these are noticed in the preface to the second volume. ${ }^{3}$ Such are the misdating of the gift of the county of Mortain to John; ${ }^{4}$ the story of the revelation of S. Thomas's martyrdom to S. Godric at Finchale, ${ }^{5}$ although he has himself mentioned the death of S. Godric as occurring, as it really did, more than a year before; the mistake touching the crossing of the younger Henry to Normandy after his coronation, and the confused account of his father's absolution at Avranches. ${ }^{6}$ The burning of Leicester is dated 1174 instead of $1173 ;^{7}$ the marriage of Henry II.'s daughter with the king of Castille is placed in 1176 instead of $1170,{ }^{8}$ the Portuguese news of the year 1187 certainly does not belong to that year, ${ }^{9}$ and the letters on the dispute touching S. Andrew's not only are misplaced, but appear with interpolated dates. ${ }^{10}$ The two latter particulars fall under the head of additions made by Hoveden to his predecessor's work, in which such indications of carelessness would be most likely to occur.

The two most important instances of the sort are, however, the misplacing of the Council of Lombers in 1176 instead of 1165 , on which I have remarked at [^19]length already; ${ }^{1}$ and the introduction of the record of Chronoloa final concord between the bishop of Durham and the in Hover archbishop of York at the end of the year 1174. ${ }^{2}$ This $\frac{\text { tions to }}{B}$ last instance requires remark, because it is connected with Hoveden's personal history, and, like the cases of miracles mentioned above, serves to show the identity of the manipulator, who betrays both his weaknesses in matters of local interest especially. Since the second volume of this work was published I have found in the Monasticon a copy of the agreement, undated, but containing the names of the witnesses. We are thus enabled both to correct the conclusions of the note at p. 70 of the second volume, and so do justice to the accuracy of Mr. Raine in fixing the date of the death of Richard of Hexham; and to state that Hoveden, although he expressly dates the record in 1174, has made a mistake of several years in so doing. The names of the witnesses of the act are A., abbot of Rievaulx, Ralph, treasurer of York, and John son of Letold, archdeacon of York. ${ }^{3}$ Of these the abbot of Rievaulx, who was none other than the famous Ailred, died in 1167; Ralph de Warneville became treasurer on the promotion of John of Poictiers in $1163 .{ }^{5}$ The date of the document falls within these two limits. It is true that the two copies do not coincide so closely ${ }^{6}$

[^20]the archdeaconry of York in Hoveden, in the Monasticon as being in the archdeaconry of Geoffrey, that is the provost of Beverley, who was drowned in 1177, and was archdeacon of York or the West Riding. Probably, however, "archidiaco" nus Eboracensis" was a loose expression, which might apply to all the archdeaconries. On the whole, it is most probable that Hoveden's is a rough copy of the same document given rather more formally in the Monasticon from the Registrum Magnum Album at York.
as to forbid the supposition that Hoveden's represents a renewal of the agreement which might be made after the death of abbot Ailred; but this can be regarded only as a possibility : as at present informed we must regard it as an instance of inaccuracy. The fact that the copy in the Monasticon contains three additional articles, besides the attestations, renders it more likely that, if they differ in date, Hoveden's is the earlier form.

Chronological errors in the concluding por-

The following are the most important places in the concluding portion of the work in which Hoveden's chronology appears to require correction, and it is observable that the first of them occurs just at the point at which the older authority stops. (1.) He places in February 1192 a report from Rome of the way in which Richard had received the news of the deposition of Longchamp, which report had been brought by Andrew of Chavigny from Palestine. ${ }^{1}$ We know, however, from the Itinerarium that Richard only received the news at Easter 1192, and that Andrew of Chavigny remained in Palestine until September. It is clear, I think, that this is misplaced by several months, and probable that the mention of Andrew is a further mistake.
(2.) The attempts of Philip of France to draw John into his treasonable designs against Richard began as soon as the former arrived home from the Crusade, and their commencement is placed by both Benedict and Richard of Devizes, who give ample details, under the year 1192. Hoveden, using nearly the same language as Benedict, places them after Christmas 1192, ${ }^{2}$ when the news of Richard's captivity had reached France. No doubt they were then resumed, and in much the same form as in the preceding year. Hoveden's departure from his authority is not therefore likely to mislead, [^21]but the similarity of the language seems to show that Cases of he had confused the transactions of the two years.

(3.) In his account of Richard's bestowal of church preferment during his captivity, our author mentions that the bishopric of Bath was given to Savaric, archdeacon of Northampton. ${ }^{1}$ Savaric had been consecrated to his see before Richard was captured, and his share in the negotiations of the release had been already more than once mentioned by Hoveden himself. ${ }^{2}$
(4) The proceedings at the court of Rome in the case of archbishop Geoffrey, which began in 1194 and reached the point at which the archbishop was sentenced to suspension at Christmas 1195, are related as occurring all in 1194. ${ }^{3}$ It is true that this is rectified in some measure in the history of $1195,{ }^{4}$ and that the letters from Rome are inserted under their proper dates. It is true also that a double set of suits against Geoffrey was being carried on through the two years, which makes the chronological arrangement in itself somewhat puzzling. But it remains clear from the fact that Hoveden repeats the very language, dates, and legal forms, which he had used in 1194, in his account of the proceedings of 1195, that he had misdated them in the first instance. Further remarks on these suits will be found further on.
(5.) The final concord between William Stuteville and William Mowbray, which was concluded at Louth in Lincolnshire on Septuagesima Sunday in the second year of John, is placed by Hoveden in 1200 instead of 1201 ; ${ }^{5}$ a fact which shows that the composition of the chronicle cannot have been exactly contemporaneous. The condition of the manuscript A. shows that it was inserted as an afterthought, but the mistake is not corrected.

[^22][^23]Chronological errors in the concluding por-
(6.) Under the year $1200^{1}$ are inserted certain rules for the business of the Exchequer, which are dated "post "Pascha, coram rege Johanne, anno regni sui secundo," which belong, if the title, including the date, be an integral part of the document, to the year 1201.

The two last-mentioned instances may be easily explained by a fact, which shows our author's forgetfulness in this respect more clearly than the mistakes themselves, and helps to identify Hoveden as the codifier of the earlier parts of the book. He begins, throughout the compilation, the year at Christmas, following the example of the author of the Gesta. That writer, throughout the reign of Henry II., when changing the date of the year, adds the regnal year of the king. As Henry II. was crowned shortly before Christmas 1154, his regnal years coincide nearly with the years of the era. The same is true of the reign of Stephen, who was crowned, according to the best authorities, on S. Stephen's day. Following, then Henry of Huntingdon's computation of Stephen's years and Benedict's computation of Henry II.'s, Hoveden keeps tolerably straight. The regnal years of Henry I., however, began in August, those of Richard I. in September, and those of John on the feast of the Ascension. In each of these cases our author falls into error. Following Henry of Huntingdon, who arranges the later history of Henry I. under regnal years, and calculating those as years of the era, he makes the error of a year from 1124 to $1135,{ }^{2}$ which has been already noticed. Adopting the same formula for Richard and John, he confuses the dates enough to show his own carelessness, though scarcely enough to mislead a careful reader. The chronicle of Benedict avoids this mistake; but Hoveden regards the year 1191 as being the second year of Richard, ${ }^{3}$ although half of it fell in his third year ; and [^24]in the same way he treats 1192, adding to the change of chronolothe year of era the year of the reign, which is not speci- liessness.

fied by the older historian. ${ }^{1}$. As he only mentions the regnal year at Christmas, and that without making an absolute mistake, this inexactness is of no importance, except as illustrating his alteration of or addition to his predecessor's notation. But under John it runs into marked error ; the Christmas of $1200-1$ is made the beginning of the third year of John, ${ }^{2}$ and consequently the final concord dated in the second year is misplaced under the year $1200,{ }^{3}$ and probably the rules of the Exchequer also inserted wrongly. ${ }^{4}$
(7.) It is possible that this same confusion has caused our author to place the transactions of the divorce business of Philip Augustus which belong to Midlent 1201 under the year 1200, the words "eodem anno," with which he opens the history, preceding by several folios the change of the year at Christmas, and the whole negotiation being inserted before the text of the peace concluded in May 1200.5
(8.) The large batch of letters which come at the end of the Chronicle is not arranged chronologically, or in the order of the negotiations to which they belong. ${ }^{6}$ This is, however, unimportant, as it is clear that the work is abruptly finished, and these documents are really rather notes for a continuation than part of a regularly arranged chronicle.

So few are the points in which a very close examina- Small imtion and collation with contemporary authors can detect these points. chronological error in Hoveden. Their principal importance, I repeat, consists in their betraying, as do the notes of superstitious credulity remarked on before, the work of a single hand on the diversified and largely borrowed materials of the compilation, and enabling us to say, here is a trace of the man Roger of Hoveden.

It would convey a wrong impression if I were to close this examination without the acknowledgment that these two drawbacks, on which I have enlarged chiefly with the purpose of identifying our author, only affect in a very slight degree, if at all, the value of his work. There are very few mediæval chroniclers who can be placed on an equality with the author of the Gesta or Chronicle of Benedict, in point of careful chronology, fulness of detail, and accuracy of treatment. To point out that Hoveden comes in a few places below that writer detracts hardly anything from his credit. It may be fairly said that Hoveden's later history is the only work that supplies the loss of his invaluable predecessor. Hoveden's work is our primary authority for the period, although it does fall somewhat below the standard of the Benedict.

Other questionable statements in the fourth portion of the work.

Besides the slight faults in chronology just enumerated, the fourth portion of Hoveden contains singularly few statements that can be regarded as erroneous. The confusion of the names of the Flemish princes which occurs several times, ${ }^{1}$ and the occasional mistake in the identification of the Christian name of a foreign bishop or king, ${ }^{2}$ are matters of slight importance, especially when it is remembered that the work as we have it was not revised or indeed completed by its compiler, and that the number of blanks left for the subsequent insertion of such names testifies to his caution in a very remarkable way. No English writer of the present day, even with the Directory and the Almanac of Gotha by his side, could guard against such little errors of detail; they cannot be made to ground a charge against a twelfth century writer. It is possible to point out a large number of places in Hoveden which are confirmed with [^27]the utmost exactness by public records and by other These are historians such as Rigord, Ralph de Diceto, and others, ferverand unt. with whom he cannot be shown to have had any communication. ${ }^{1}$ It would be difficult to point out more than one or two in which his testimony is decidedly contradicted. On a careful examination I think the most important discrepancy between our author and the French historians is in the statement made by the former that in the rout after the battle of Gisors in 1198 Miles de Puiset, count of Bar, and John, the brother of William des Barres, were drowned in the Epte. ${ }^{2}$ William of Armorica, in the Philippis, states that Philip lost no knight in the river on that occasion, ${ }^{3}$ and certainly the count of Bar seems to have survived for many years. ${ }^{4}$ Hoveden's mistake as to the date of the treaty of the year $1200^{5}$ between John and Philip is easily explained, and is corrected by the copy of the treaty itself given further on. ${ }^{6}$ A few other points of the kind may be found treated in the notes.

It remains now to call attention succinctly to the Most im. three most important topics that are illustrated by points speHoveden in the fourth portion of the work. These are trated. the history of Archbishop Geoffrey of York, the legal and political administration of Hubert Walter and Geoffrey FitzPeter, and the light thrown upon foreign history by the more careful notices of events which took place during the period in Italy, Germany, Norway, and Spain. Of these the first two not only are of great interest in themselves, but, owing to Hoveden's opportunities of gaining information, come before us with especial advantage in his pages. A short summary of them, supplementing where it is possible his omissions, and somewhat systematizing his loose details, will serve better than any' fancy sketch of his personal share in them, to help us to realize the atmosphere in which he lived, and the characters of the men with whom he associated whilst preparing his history.

I. The religious and ecclesiastical condition of the province of York during the twelfth century was anomalous and extremely critical. The country had never recovered the savage cruelties to which it was subjected by the Conqueror. Northumbria had been one of the best and earliest consolidated kingdoms of the Heptarchy, her kings the bravest and holiest, her missionaries the most devoted ; her monasteries had kept up European learning in the darkest age, her mariners and merchants were enterprising, her population equally and abundantly diffused. Archæological discovery testifies to a populousness and a civilization that history seems almost to have forgotten. Under the Danish invasion Yorkshire had gone through no more severe experiences than Middle England; the Angle population coalesced with the Danish immigrants; the lands changed their owners and the villages their names, but the changes were in analogy and in proportion to the usual rule. The conquerors were converted and civilized ; but whilst they presented in some respects a marked contrast with the men of the south, the social condition of the country was not very different from what it had been, or from the rest of England. The phantom kings of Danish Northumbria rose and fell under the alternate pressure of West Saxon suzerainty, or recurring invasion from Scandinavia. The archbishop, by far the more permanent institution of the two, vindicated in practice his independence of his southern brother, and not unfre-quently represented his province as a distinct nationality $\begin{gathered}\text { Previous } \\ \text { condition }\end{gathered}$ from that of Canterbury.

During the century before the Conquest the political condition of the northern primacy had been materially varied. The inclusion of Nottinghamshire, a Mercian county, within the diocese of York, made the archbishop a regular member of the Witenagemot of the West Saxon dynasty, and the hold thus given was, by the royal policy, strengthened by suffering the archbishop to hold the extensive bishopric of Worcester in commendam. ${ }^{1}$ The adhesion of Yorkshire to the West Saxon race of Desolation kings was secured far more by the archbishops of York lider Wh than by the ealdormen of Northumbria; and notwithstanding many drawbacks from internal quarrels, and the threatening growth of the power of the Scots, the district enjoyed an average tranquillity and comparative wealth and prosperity until the terrible invasion of 1069. What William then left undone was completed by Malcolm and Cospatric in 1070. The ambition and turbulence of the Norman earls and the savage inroads of the Scots prolonged the desolation until the accession of Restoration Henry I. Henry put an end to the ravages of the $\begin{gathered}\text { of order } \mathrm{H} \text {. }\end{gathered}$ Scots, took advantage of the forfeitures of the Mowbrays to endow a less dangerous body of nobles, and attempted [^29]of the see. Aldred, who succeeded Living in 1045, became archbishop of York in 1061 ; Sampson, the first Norman bishop of Worcester, was brother of Thomas I., archbishop of York; Thomas II., archbishop of York, was son of Sampson, bishop of Worcester. The church of S . Oswald at Gloucester was a peculiar of York, and the cause of one of the quarrels of Richard of Canterbury with archbishop Roger. The close connexion subsisted in one shape or another for at least 150 years.

to restore here as elsewhere so much of the ancient political system as was capable of resuscitation.

But the ecclesiastical organization had suffered as deeply as the social, and in the process of restoration neither church nor state had much choice of means and instruments. The old border sees of Whithern and Hexham had been extinct for centuries. The archbishop exercised or rather claimed to exercise his jurisdiction in the north-western counties through the archdeacons of Richmond, under whose ineffective rule the church was impoverished and demoralized. Nearer the centre the work of restoration was undertaken by the Cistercians ; but of the prelates to whom the Norman kings entrusted the see of York, the first Thomas was mainly occupied in a struggle with Canterbury, and seems to have lived most frequently at Gloucester ; Gerard, his successor, was a mere courtier, and Thomas II., a pious man, did not live long enough to produce any marked result. Thurstan, the fourth archbishop after the Conquest, devoted himself heart and soul to the revival of religion and of the arts of peace. Thurstan was the great patron of the Cistercians, on whom likewise the nobles, rich in land if poor in money, lavished enormous territorial grants, and the Cistercians, not only by their devotion to the religious improvement of their dependents, but by their attention to sheep farming and grazing, which only could make their estates remunerative in the thinness of the reduced population, laid posterity under a double debt. It was under Thurstan's primacy, moreover, that the see of Carlisle was founded and that of Whithern revived; the former to undertake a substantive share in church government ; the latter perhaps to enable the primate to extend the benefit of episcopal work to the remoter portions of his enormous diocese.

No sooner, however, was this measure of policy adopted than it was defeated, and the work thrown back for twenty years. The occupation of Northumberland and Cumberland by the Scots coincided in point of Disputed time with the paralysis of church government at York, archbishop. arising from the disputed election of S. William and Henry Murdac. During these years the lands in Scottish hands had no effective spiritual supervision. The Scottish church was disabled for the work by deficiencies of organization, which, already apparent, went on increasing in importance until it fell before the comparative life and order of the Calvinistic reformation. The bishop of Carlisle was only occasionally allowed to visit his diocese, and after his death sixty-two years elapsed before a successor could be prevailed on to accept the see. In Yorkshire S. William was supported by the party of Stephen and his brother the legate; Henry Murdac by the Cistercian interest, backed not only by the archbishop of Canterbury, but by S. Bernard himself, and all powerful at Rome. The better title and the wiser influence were arrayed against each other. Murdac held the see as long as he lived. The restoration of S. William, and the promotion of Hugh de Puiset, who was, like himself, a nephew of Stephen, were probably parts of the general scheme of pacification that belongs to the year 1153. But whilst the princes were struggling, the church was perishing, and the degradation of the latter was accomplished when Osbert of Bayeux, who had been archdeacon to Thurstan ${ }^{1}$ and Murdac, having poisoned the archbishop in the Eucharistic chalice, claimed and obtained immunity as a clergyman from the vengeance of the outraged law.

The reign of Henry II. witnessed the restoration of Restoration the lost counties and of the territorial completeness of of order the province. It was, with the exception of one considerable struggle, a period of peace for the north country.

[^30]Archbishop Roger.

The chair of Paulinus was filled by the active and clever Roger of Pont l'Evêque, and that of Durham by Hugh de Puiset, of whom his worst enemies could not say that he was either indolent or avaricious. Both these prelates showed much zeal and considerable constructive power in their administration : both however were builders of castles rather than of churches, and church builders rather than missionaries. ${ }^{1}$ The distant portions of Roger's diocese scarcely felt his rule at all ; the nearer were planted with prebendal churches, and brought up to the ordinary standard of the southern dioceses. Craven was however still left to the Cistercians; Richmondshire, Lancashire, and Westmoreland to the absentee archdeacons; the North Riding was full of peculiars of the Church of Durham, ancient demesnes of S. Cuthbert, which had been reclaimed from the prevailing desolation. And occupations of the primate. Roger moreover was a courtier and a lawyer; he had his quarrels with Becket to carry to their wretched end; he was the greatest power in Yorkshire, and on him the organization of the defence depended as much as that of Durham and Northumberland on the Palatine earl-bishop. The importance of the sheriffdom of Yorkshire was so great that it was generally entrusted to the prime minister of the Crown, the chief justiciar, as the most trusty of the baronage, and in his constant absence the real burden of counsel, if not of authority, fell on the primate.The close connexion of the archbishop with the court had the further effect of filling all the posts of importance in the northern church with royal officials, who [^31]were absentees and unpriestly, if not irreligious, men. AppointAnd this evil was aggravated during the long vacancy ments of $\begin{gathered}\text { mbsentees. }\end{gathered}$ that followed the death of Archbishop Roger in 1181. Henry's reasons for prolonging this vacancy can only be guessed at; but it seems probable that he was influenced partly by the large revenue which he was enabled to draw into the exchequer, ${ }^{1}$ partly by an aversion to Long bestow upon any of his clerical ministers a preferment the see of which might involve a second struggle, such as that with Roath. Becket had been; partly by an indistinct intention of somehow providing for his faithful son Geoffrey. The course of action adopted was, however, very prejudicial to Geoffrey's interests; the prolongation of the vacancy being itself a great source of disturbance to the province, and the ecclesiastics who were promoted being of the class most likely to be jealous of a new archbishop, and especially of such a one as Geoffrey. Geoffrey's troubles were thus created for him long before he had any certain prospect of the archiepiscopate, and the circumstances under which he was promoted to it were untoward in an extreme degree.

In September 1186, Henry II., in a court at Marl- Attempts at borough, ${ }^{2}$ proposed to the assembled canons of York the election of a new archbishop; and they nominated five persons for royal approval. These were Hubert Walter the Dean, Hamo the precentor, Bernard, prior of Newburgh, Laurence, archdeacon of Bedford, and Master Roger Arundel ; the two last were ministers of the Exchequer, who had at the time the management of the archiepiscopal revenue. ${ }^{1}$ Henry refused all five, as he had in the preceding May declined to sanction the election of Richard Fitz Neal, Godfrey de Lucy, and Herbert the poor to the see of Lincoln; on that occasion alleging that all these candidates were rich enough already, and that for the future he would never give a bishopric to any one for love, or relationship, counsel, prayer, or price, but to those whom the Lord should choose. ${ }^{2}$ It was no doubt from something like a religious sense of right that he promoted Hugh of Lincoln and Archbishop Baldwin, but his other nominations both before and after this date can scarcely be reconciled with this declaration.

Nothing more was done in the matter until the king's last illness, when he nominated his son Geoffrey. During this time the ministers of the Exchequer received the temporalities of the see, Hubert Walter as dean had the care of the spiritualities, ${ }^{3}$ and the episcopal functions were discharged by the bishop of Durham, who as a principal member of the church of York seems to have claimed certain undefined rights in the cathedral body, if not also a voice in the election of the metropolitan, analogous with that which the southern bishops still occasionally exercised in the elections to Canterbury. ${ }^{4}$ of the chapter at this time.Very much of the interest of the subsequent history depends on the character and position of the canons of the chapter at this time. At the head of it was Hubert Walter, the nephew and chaplain of Ranulf Glanvill, justiciar of England and sheriff of Yorkshire. He of course was non-resident, having been generally in attendance on the king, either as the representative of the justiciar who remained in England whilst Henry was [^33]abroad, or in some capacity connected with the business Hubert of the Chancery. ${ }^{1}$ Hubert was a man, as his later history dean. showed, of great ability in affairs, a well-trained and most practical statesman, and a thoroughly English minister to a thoroughly un-English king. It is in his relationship to Archbishop Geoffrey that the worst side of his character comes out. As having been elected to the see in 1186, and being in possession, as dean, of the spiritualities, he seems to have regarded himself as having a claim upon the archiepiscopate which the promotion of Geoffrey of course would disappoint. The power which he had in the chapter and diocese in these two capacities was exercised in his absence by his official, Master Bartholomew. ${ }^{2}$ Next in importance though not $\begin{gathered}\text { The arelh- } \\ \text { deacons. }\end{gathered}$ in dignity after the dean, were the archdeacons; Ralph, of the West Riding, of whom we know no more than transpires from his subsequent conduct to Geoffrey ; Geoffrey Muschamp, ${ }^{3}$ of Cleveland, who afterwards was bishop of Lichfield; and William Testard, of Nottingham. The archdeaconry of the East Riding was annexed, it would seem, to the treasurership. ${ }^{4}$ The archdeaconry of [^34]whatever title must have brought him into early intercourse with Geoffrey, and probably produced the personal jealousy which so much affects their later relations.

${ }^{2}$ Hoveden, iii. 7. Benedict, ii. 77.
${ }^{3}$ Geoffrey Muschamp was probably appointed by Henry II. just before his death, as his nomination is one of those said to be fraudulently sealed by Geoffrey as chancellor, and as his predecessor Jeremiah is mentioned in the Pipe Roll of 1 Rich. I. Hoveden, iii. 274.
${ }^{4}$ This is an inference from the fact that no archdeacon of the East Riding is mentioned in these disputes, and that the churches which

Of the great dignities of the chapter, the treasurership was held by Geoffrey himself, the king's son; he had received it on the promotion of Ralph Warneville, his predecessor in the chancellorship, together with the archdeaconry of Rouen, and probably other important preferment. ${ }^{2}$ The treasurership was a very valuable post, next in wealth to the deanery, andGeoffrey the very far beyond the other dignities. It had been held treasurer. in succession by S . William, afterwards archbishop; Hugh de Puiset ; John of Poictiers, afterwards archbishop of Lyons ; and Ralph of Warneville, the chancellor. It was properly in the gift of the archbishop, and in fact Roger, who died whilst the promotion of Ralph de Warneville was in contemplation, had promised the reversion of it to the precentor Hamo, ${ }^{3}$ thus preparing a new rival and a pertinacious one for his unlucky successor. The chancellorship of the church was vacant.

[^35]election to the see in 1186, and seems from the later Permanence history to have edie the the therealhis as well as to have wielded all its local influence. Of the canons. other canons only a few names have reached us, and those are of local interest only. ${ }^{1}$ But it seems not improbable that the hereditary principle in the tenure of these preferments still retained some vitality. The most important ecclesiastics in Yorkshire after these seem to have been Peter de Ros, archdeacon of Carlisle, and Roger Arundel, a canon of Southwell and custos of the temporalities of the see. It must not be forgotten that other chapthe archbishop had at Ripon, Beverley, and Southwell, cearsons. three other chapters of canons well endowed and largely leavened with influential public men. Amongst these it would be strange if Roger Hoveden were not provided for ; that he was so however we have no proof.

The news of Geoffrey's nomination to the archbishopric Geofrey's must have reached England with the news of Henry's misisisa of of her's death ; and it was afterwards said that he turned the fact of his holding the great seal to advantage, by sealing letters of collation to vacant prebends, after his father's decease ${ }^{2}$ and before the seal of the new king was made. If the charge is true, his purpose probably was to insure himself a certain party among the canons. Hoveden very justly remarks upon the act as disgraceful if true ; ${ }^{3}$ [^36]and Master Honorius by archbishop Geoffrey. Besides these Peter of Flanders held the prebend of Husthwaite, Hugh Murdac was another canon, A dam of Thornovere another.

${ }^{2}$ Hoveden, iii. 274.
${ }^{3}$ That the accusation was rife seems to be shown by Giraldus, who mentions that Geoffrey immediately on his father's death sealed up the great seal with the seals of the barons who were present, and sent it to Richard, V. Galfr. p. 382.

The vacancies probably filled up by Henry before his death.

Geoffrev's nomination confirmed by Richard.
but it does not follow that anything was done without the direction of Henry, whose death was sudden and whose last commands were confided to Geoffrey. Richard seems to have had no fault to find with the nomination at first ; Henry's promise made on the 4th or 5th of July at Chinon was confirmed by the new sovereign at Rouen, on the occasion of his investiture with the duchy of Normandy on the 20th of the same month, ${ }^{1}$ and Geoffrey immediately despatched his officers with royal letters to York to replace those of the king and the dean, and to transact the business of the election, which must necessarily be conducted in canonical form. So little time was lost in doing this, that on the 10th of August the chapter assembled to make the election.
Election of Geoffrey by the chapter.

The prospect of having such an archbishop as Geoffrey after a long interval of quasi independence was not very welcome to the York clergy ; but at first they seem to have made the best of it. The archdeacon of Richmond, who probably saw the way to promotion open elsewhere, sent a letter of proxy to assent to it ; ${ }^{2}$ and a sufficient number of canons present followed the lead; but the act was not completed without a strong protest on the part of Master Bartholomew, the dean's official, who appealed to the pope against the election as invalid, in consequence of the absence of his principal, and of the bishop of Durham the only surviving suffragan. William of Newburgh tells us that the precentor was frightened into taking part; ${ }^{3}$ but as we find him a little later good friends with Geoffrey, on whose support he may have reckoned in his pursuit of the treasurership, it is probable that he joined willingly in the election.

Richard himself believed or found it convenient to believe the charge, and Geoffrey seems to have admitted or not to have contradicted it. Hoveden, iii. 274.
${ }^{1}$ Benedict, ii. 73.

[^37]Geoffrey seems to have considered that his promptness Time lost by in obtaining canonical election superseded the necessity after the of further watchfulness. He neglecied to keep Richard election. in sight, and instead of following the court to England at once, spent some weeks in visiting his estates in Anjou and Touraine. Giraldus Cambrensis ${ }^{1}$ alleges that he was reluctant to take orders, and so to cut himself off from a remote chance of succession to the throne. It is possible that there may be a grain of truth in the assertion; that he was anxious to retain his hold on the see of York without taking orders until it was absolutely necessary; it is also possible that Richard's design was to draw him into Holy Orders by the hope of the archiepiscopate, intending, as was afterwards done, that by means of pecuniary exactions and enforced exile he should be disarmed of any power that the position entitled him to. All this is, however, conjectural. The fact was that from the very moment that his promotion was announced a large number of influences were set to work against him. Queen Eleanor naturally disliked opposition her husband's natural son, whose behaviour to his father to hisis apwas in such strong contrast with that of her own children. Bishop Hugh de Puiset was very much disinclined to accept as his superior so energetic a person as Geoffrey; and was not without hope of obtaining the see of York for his nephew Bouchard. ${ }^{2}$ The ministerial party moved by Hubert Walter and represented by Ranulf Glanvill remonstrated against the appointment; and the canons who had been absent or in the minority at the election, moved also by Hubert Walter, pushed their appeal. This Appeal of appeal was formally renewed by Hubert in the presence Walter. of five bishops, a few days after Richard's landing, at Winchester ; and the result was the issuing of a mandate from that place that the property both temporal and spiritual of the see should remain as it was at the death of the late king. In consequence of this Geoffrey's servants were displaced by those of the dean and the Exchequer. ${ }^{1}$

Geoffrey, finding that he was quickly losing the hold on his brother which the remorse consequent on his father's death had given him, now hastened to England; met the representaiives of the chapter at London, and after a show of reluctance gave his formal consent to the election. ${ }^{2}$ Thence he proceeded to Windsor, where after considerable difficulties he seems to have made good his position against all opponents, or perhaps to have outbid them in promises made to secure the fickle favour of Richard. He appeared at the coronation as elect of York; ${ }^{3}$ but the appeal probably rendered it necessary that the process of election should be renewed, or at all events receive papal confirmation.

At the council of Pipewell Richard attempted, by his distribution of ecclesiastical patronage, to satisfy all the opposing interests involved in this question. To Geoffrey he gave the archbishopric ; Hubert Walter was reconciled by his appointment to Salisbury; Godfrey de Lucy got his expected promotion at Winchester ; the bishop of Durham obtained for Bouchard the treasurership of York, vacated by Geoffrey, and gave his formal assent to the election of Geoffrey. ${ }^{4}$ The difficulties of the appointment were however complicated by the conduct of Archbishop Baldwin, who, remembering the old strife between York and Canterbury, forbade the consecration of Geoffrey by any other bishop than himself. This was especially unreasonable, as Baldwin was now starting for the Crusade ; Geoffrey's confirmation at Rome could not be transacted before he departed, and the king had determined that Geoffrey should not set foot in England

At this juncture a little common sense and self- Hiswant of restraint might have stood Geoffrey in good stead. prdudence. He was eminently impracticable. He had for the moment got rid of his most formidable difficulties; his rivals were provided for by promotion, and he himself was almost in possession. Richard had allowed him to visit his see and had commissioned him to go as far as the Tweed at the head of the baronage of Yorkshire to meet William the Lion, whom he was to conduct to Canterbury to do homage. From Southwell he made his way to York where he speedily involved himself in new troubles.

Geoffrey had been at York sixteen years before, when His visit to as elect of Lincoln he had headed the king's forces against the Mowbrays in the great rebellion of 1174, and having beaten them had been received in the ancient city in triumph. ${ }^{2}$ In that struggle he had shown qualities that seemed beyond his years ; now, a man of mature age, he showed a want of tact that would have been remarkable in a boy. The promotion of Hubert The new Walter had vacated the deanery, and the king had given dignita. it to Henry, brother of the great William Marshall; he and Bouchard de Puiset were now at York waiting to be installed. Although the king's right to fill up the places, which became vacant during the vacancy of the see, seems to have been fully recognized, Geoffrey was vexed to see himself deprived of the two best preferments in his gift ; the precentor Hamo had already, acting in the interest of the archbishop, refused to install the new dignitaries on the ground that the right belonged to the archbishop only. Geoffrey himself refused on the excuse that until he was confirmed by the pope his acts would be liable to be invalidated. The dean and treasurer hastened off to complain to the king. Geoffrey was solemnly received in the minster, but as soon as the news reached Richard he ordered all the lay estates of his brother in England and France to be seized. He does not however seem to have threatened his tenure of his canonical rights.

He conducts From York Geoffrey proceeded northwards, met the Hubert Walter, although now bishop of Salisbury, renewed his claim; Hugh de Puiset vouched for the uncanonical character of Geoffrey's election; stories of Geoffrey's private behaviour were invented and brought to Richard;

Renewed
efforts of his enemies. he had been used to put the cover of a gold bowl on his head and say, "Is not this head fit to wear a crown ?" and he had trodden underfoot a portrait of Richard, saying that such a king as he ought so to be treated. ${ }^{1}$ And now the disappointed dean and treasurer put in their word; the man was a murderer, the son of an adulterer and a whore, ${ }^{2}$ unworthy to be promoted to the priesthood.

He goes to the legate and offends the king.

Geoffrey, again unwisely, betook himself to John of Anagni, the papal legate, who was then at Dover, and obtained from him confirmation in defiance of these appeals ; ${ }^{3}$ so little did he understand the nature of his brother. Richard was extremely indignant, but there was a way in which his indignation could at any time be assuaged. He extorted a promise from Geoffrey to pay him 2,000l. ; the appeals were then withdrawn, the [^40]legate's confirmation recognized, and Geoffrey's posses- Richard is sions, personal and official, restored. He in his turn had reconciled. to confirm the appointments of the king's nominees, and promised to renew the covenants which his predecessor had made with the bishop of Durham.

Again Geoffrey started for the north. The king left Geoffrey Dover on the 11th of December. Early in January the $\begin{gathered}\text { Eos Yogain in } \\ \text { January } \\ \text { tor }\end{gathered}$ archbishop elect, the dean, and the treasurer were at ${ }^{1190}$. York; and before the twelve days of Christmas were over they were in a thicker fray than ever. On the eve of the Epiphany the archbishop proposed to attend vespers in the minster in state. The precentor Hamo and the other canons who were on his side waited to receive him in procession. Whether Geoffrey was behind time or not does not appear ; but when the procession reached the choir they found that the candles were lighted and that the dean and treasurer had begun the service. So marked and gratuitous an insult roused He is inGeoffrey at once, he commanded the choir to be silent, sulted in the and the precentor in a more constitutional way seconded and treathe command. The order was obeyed and Geoffrey himself began to sing the service; thereupon the treasurer ordered the candles to be extinguished ; the management of the lights belonged to the treasurer as much as that of the singing did to the precentor; his command also was obeyed, and Geoffrey finished the vespers in the dark. When the service was over he protested loudly against the insult, and suspended the church from Divine service until an apology should be made him. ${ }^{1}$

Geoffrey although impracticable was placable enough ; He ofers on the following day he offered to meet the dean and conciled. treasurer and to receive amends. The church was full of clergy and citizens anxious, no doubt, to see the new archbishop and canons, as well as to witness the issue of the struggle. The two parties met in the choir, and Geoffrey was ready to be reconciled ; but the two dignitaries not only refused an apology but tried to get up a demonstration against him. A riot followed, the citizens took Geoffrey's part and were with difficulty restrained by him from falling on his opponents. Dismayed at the result they had recourse to flight; one took refuge in the tomb of S. William, the other in the deanery. Unhappily Geoffrey was not now content with their discomfiture, he excommunicated them both and closed the church. ${ }^{1}$

Unfortunate This unfortunate affray defeated one of the main ob-consequences. jects of Geoffrey's visit. It offended Hugh de Puiset, who, as justiciar, forbade the tenants of the see to pay any money to the elect; ${ }^{2}$ and it opened the eyes of the citizens to his uncertain tenure of his office, so that it was impossible to raise a loan. He had to follow Richard to France without the money that he had promised. He found him at Lions, ${ }^{3}$ about Easter, told his story, and

Richard again offended. found himself again disseized. Not content with this the king now sent the bishop of Bath, Reginald FitzJocelin; Nicolas, dean of S. Julian's at Le Mans ; and Bouchard de Puiset, to Rome to forbid his recognition The pope by the pope. ${ }^{4}$ For this, however, they were too late; confirms the Clement III. had already on the 7 th of March confirmed the election and sent the pall. ${ }^{5}$ After another tedious negotiation with Richard, in the course of which he offered to surrender the estates of the see for a yearly pension, he obtained grace. At Vezelai he paid 800

Geoffrey's agents on this occasion were Simon of Apulia, an Italian lawyer, who had served Henry II., and whom he now, or a little later, made chancellor of York; his friend Hamo the precentor; William Testard archdeacon of Nottingham, and Ralph Wigetoft canon of Ripon; all of whom, except the last, afterwards took a decided part against him. ${ }^{1}$

For a year and a quarter Geoffrey stayed at Tours. During this time Longchamp was supreme in England; consecration The objections to his Hugh de Puiset reduced to insignificance, and living at drawn. Howden ; the dean and treasurer all-powerful in York. What little action was taken in his concerns was carried on at Rome and Messina. In April 1191 Eleanor was instructed by Richard to inform the pope that the objections to his brother's consecration were removed. ${ }^{2}$ Celestine III., within a month of his own elevation to the papacy, issued an order to the archbishop of Tours to consecrate him, and on the 11th of May authorized him to exact from Bishop Hugh de Puiset the profession of obedience which Clement III. had allowed him to decline. ${ }^{3}$ Of this Hugh was immediately informed by Precauhis agents, and forthwith appealed against it as involving tionary a grievance to his church, placing his own person and of the of church, with all its members, under the special protection of the holy see. ${ }^{4}$ According to Giraldus, the archbishop had been released from his promise to stay away from England for three years, before he parted from Richard ; but the exact truth or falsehood of this statement has never been cleared up. ${ }^{1}$ He now prepared for his consecration and for his return home as soon as it should be completed.

He was consecrated by the archbishop of Tours in the church of S. Maurice at Tours on the 18th of August, and received the pall the same day from the abbot of Marmoutier. ${ }^{2}$ That done he issued a letter to the bishop of Durham to attend a synod of the province of York on the Monday after Michaelmas, in which he should both renew his profession and give an account of his conduct in detaining the procurations due to the see of York from the jurisdictions of Allertonshire and Howdenshire. ${ }^{3}$ On the receipt of this summons Hugh again appealed to Rome.

Longchamp's deposition took place on the 10th of October. That done, Hugh laid his case before the bishops. Geoffrey hastened by Northampton, where he had studied in earlier years, and was still sufficiently popular to be welcomed with a procession, to York, where he was enthroned with great solemnity on All Saints' day. ${ }^{5}$ Bishop Hugh failed to make his appearance, and after three citations, ${ }^{6}$ to which he replied by three appeals, was excommunicated, Geoffrey so far disregarding mode-

[^44]rate counsels as to direct that the sacred vessels in which Hugh conHoly Communion was celebrated in the bishop's presence sentence should be broken up, as polluted. ${ }^{1}$ Hugh took up his excosmanumiresidence acain at Howden, where John visited him at cated, Feb. 2, Christmas; he also urged his appeal at Rome. Exasperated by this contempt Geoffrey excommunicated him a second time in more violent terms than before on Candlemas day $1192 .{ }^{2}$

Not content apparently with making one inveterate $\frac{\text { Appal of }}{\text { the }}$ and powerful enemy, and involving himself in one suit of the priment at Rome, Geoffrey soon after this excommunicated the prioress of Clementhorpe for resisting his command to reduce her little nunnery to dependence on the distant abbey of Godstow. ${ }^{3}$ She also carried her wrongs to the pope. The heavy hand of Geoffrey fell also on the chapter. Henry Marshall and Bouchard de Puiset were Newappeals stimulated by the bishop of Durham to renew their of the appeals, and a new quarrel emerged, the causes of which municaare obscure, but which alienated from the archbishop his old servant Adam of Thornovere, Peter de Ros, the archdeacon of Carlisle, and Hugh Murdac, another of the canons. As usual, Geoffrey excommunicated them, and as usual, they appealed. ${ }^{4}$ Matters looked so threatening that at Midlent the queen summoned the two prelates to London to compel them to keep the peace. They obeyed Failure of the summons; Hugh offered to submit to the arbitration the atempen's at at of the bishops, but Geoffrey insisted that he should sue tioeneiliato him for absolution and promise obedience. Hugh answered that if that was the archbishop's view he would make no peace with him unless he would publicly confess that his sentence of excommunication was null. Geoffrey would not hear of this, and having added to the number of his enemies the bishop of London and other suffragans of Canterbury, whom he had outraged by having his cross borne erect at the Temple, returned somewhat discomfited to his own province. ${ }^{1}$

Commission of delegates on the quarrel with the bishop of Durham

It was just at this juncture that a commission was brought from Rome, directed to the bishops of Lincoln and Rochester and the abbot of Peterborough, ordering. them to declare that the pope had annulled the sentence against Bishop Hugh ; ${ }^{2}$ and further enjoining on them that if on inquiry they found that the archbishop had issued the orders for destroying the sacred vessels, the bishop should no longer be bound to make his profession of obedience. The judges delegate undertook to arrange

Sittings of the delegates. this quarrel. After a hearing early in the spring they adjourned to Midsummer day, and from Midsummer day, as the bishop of Durham was absent from England, to the feast of S . Calixtus. ${ }^{3}$ The other disputes queen Eleanor and the justiciar, Walter of Coutances, took in hand. It was necessary to send Hugh de Puiset to France on important business ; he refused to go unless the questions were settled. Under this stimulus they issued peremptory letters to Geoffrey to satisfy his discontented chapter, and directed William Stuteville, in case of his noncompliance, to seize the whole estates of the see. ${ }^{4}$
Apologies of the canons.

It would have been madness to disobey such a monition ; fortunately for Geoffrey his opponents were growing tired of the contest. Bouchard de Puiset, Adam of Thornovere, Hugh Murdac, and Peter de Ros consented to ask formally for absolution, and Geoffrey in return for [^47]his profession at all. Hugh was not satisfied with this; he sent back his agents to demand entire independence of Geoffrey. The same conclusion is inferred from the language of William of Newburgh, lib. iv. cap. 27.

Only the dean held out, and against him the archbishop hurled an avalanche of curses, going so far as to place his metropolitan city under interdict so long as it was polluted by Henry Marshall's presence. ${ }^{2}$

At this point we lose the guidance of the Chronicle of ReconciliaBenedict, and Hoveden does not immediately take up tain of thioe $\begin{gathered}\text { arith } \\ \text { with bishop }\end{gathered}$ the thread of the story; but it would appear from a $\frac{\text { Nusph in }}{\text { October }}$ scanty notice preserved by Gervase of Canterbury, ${ }^{3}$ that 1192. the judges delegate arranged a reconciliation between Geoffrey and Hugh at Northampton in October, the old bishop consenting at last to recognize his canonical superior. The reconciliation lasted for some time, being no doubt strengthened by the union which was effected throughout the north against John, who had taken up arms on the news of his brother's imprisonment. The Promotion most obdurate of Geoffrey's opponents was also got rid of soon after. Richard whilst in Germany nominated the dean of York to the see of Exeter.

Up to this time we may fairly regard Geoffrey as not Geoffrey more sinned against than sinning. All the difficulties of fivitimized his position, the provoking attitude of his opponents, the Hubert , and low standard of ecclesiastical morality, are insufficient to servants. excuse the wanton exercise of the awful weapon of excommunication. Henceforth we see him the victim not only of grossly unfair treatment by Richard, but of the less obvious persistent hostility of Hubert Walter, and of cruel ingratitude on the part of his own servants.

Promotion of Hubert Walter.

His own conduct is as far as ever from being impeccable; he is still a violent, intemperate, impracticable man of the world, but he has no longer to contend with opponents whose party principles and prejudices palliate the guilt of their conduct towards him ; his enemies are now the men whose fortunes he has founded, and for whom in great measure the actions have been done which gave an excuse for the enmity of his earlier foes.

The news of Richard's imprisonment reconciled him for a time with Hugh de Puiset, and the promotion of Henry Marshall delivered him from his greatest personal enemy in the chapter. But the necessities of Richard's ransom compelled him to take measures which alienated all his friends at York, whilst the negotiations for the appointment of a new dean resulted in the conversion of his oldest and most confidential servant into a bitter and inveterate personal enemy, whose conduct became a precedent and excuse for a long series of desertions. The promotion of Hubert Walter to the archbishopric of Canterbury, shortly followed by his nomination to the justiciarship, and a year later by his appointment as legate, placed the unfortunate and imprudent Geoffrey at the mercy of an old and honourable but still determined enemy.

Amongst the first persons in England to whom Richard

Richard asks Geoffrey's aid in the raising of his ransom. in his great emergency applied for help in raising the ransom money was Geoffrey, ${ }^{1}$ on whom, notwithstanding his treatment of him, he felt he could depend, both as his father's son, as an ally who had everything to fear from John, and as a source of revenue which if fairly managed would not be soon exhausted. Geoffrey showed the greatest alacrity in taking up arms for the defence of Richard's rights ; and with scarcely less zeal, tempered however by no slight misgivings, he undertook to negotiate for supplies. He laid the matter of the ransom before the Chapter of York; ${ }^{1}$ throughout the kingdom, Refinal of he said, it had been agreed that a very great sacrifice cereryork to should be made, it was necessary that they should offer she exaca fourth part of their annual revenue. Hoveden, in telling the story, rises in tone for the moment to dilate on the ingratitude of the clergy. He called, counselled, entreated those canons with whom he had had the most friendly relations, whom he had enriched and promoted, to do this. They at once turned round upon him, declared that he was attempting to destroy the liberties of his Church, and that from henceforth they would have nothing more to do with him. The threat seems to have been literally carried out. They left him to the They close company of his household servants, closed the minster, the mind block forbade the ringing of the bells, stripped the altars, arechbishop. locked up the archbishop's stall in the choir, and blocked up the door by which he entered the church from his palace. Coincident with this unseemly state of things arose the quarrel with Simon of Apulia.

This unprincipled adventurer we have already seen Simon of acting as Geoffrey's confidential servant. He had been Aperts shime his agent at Rome in 1190 ; he it was who commanded the enemies. the archbishop's retinue when he returned to England : ${ }^{2}$ and Geoffrey had rewarded him with the gift of the chancellorship of York, and even promised him the reversion of the provostship of Beverley. In gratitude and hope alike he might have been patient with a master whose difficulties he knew better than anyone else. The news of Henry Marshall's appointment to Exeter reached Geoffrey whilst he was staying at Ripon, ${ }^{3}$ and he prepared to fill up the deanery. He had a brother named Peter, probably, as he is not called son of Henry II., the son of his mother by one of her other lovers. Peter had been made archdeacon of Lincoln

some years before. Geoffrey now proposed to make him dean of York. He was however at Paris, and Richard had sent from Germany an urgent letter desiring that John of Bethune, provost of Douay and brother to the advocate Baldwin, who had accompanied him on his return from Palestine and shared his captivity, should be appointed. In order to avoid doing this, or leaving the preferment open, Geoffrey consulted his two friends, the preferment open, Geoffrey consulted his two friends, Simon and Hamo, who were with him at Ripon, and the result of the deliberation was that Simon was nominated. Shortly after, when the dread of Richard's interference had blown over, Geoffrey declared that he intended him merely as a stop gap for his brother Peter. Simon insisted that the appointment was bona fide, and threw himself on the sympathy of the discontented canons, helping, no doubt, to organize the opposition on the subject of the money grant. The chapter elected him to the deanery, and then Geoffrey, attempting to disarm Richard's anger, named to the same office Philip of Poictiers, the king's favourite chaplain and clerk, who disarm Richard's anger, named to the same office Philip of Poictiers, the king's favourite chaplain and clerk, who became afterwards bishop of Durham.

Both parties now appealed to Rome, and both took the precaution of laying the circumstances before the king in Germany. Simon visited Richard in person, and so got the first word. The king at first contented king in Germany. Simon visited Richard in person, and so got the first word. The king at first contented himself with forbidding the appeals and summoning
Richard comnives. Geoffrey into his presence; but finding that Geoffrey did not obey the summons, he allowed the canons free action against him. ${ }^{1}$
The archbishop's delay or disobedience was thus accounted for. He had started on the receipt of the king's order, and had reached the coast, when he received the intelligence of the closing of the minster and the other

[^50]outrageous doings of the chapter. ${ }^{1}$ He immediately sent $\begin{aligned} & \text { He visits } \\ & \text { York and }\end{aligned}$ to York by his clerks a peremptory command to the places liis clergy of the cathedral to return to their duties; this in the they treated with contempt, and the archbishop found $\begin{gathered}\text { minster, } \\ \text { January }\end{gathered}$ that le must return in person. He did so, arrived at York on the first of January 1194, and found the church deserted. ${ }^{2}$ Taking counsel, as Hoveden tells us, with prudent men, he substituted for the contumacious clerks another body of chaplains, and excommunicated the canons. The latter, determined to lose no time, sent four of their number to the king. These four were Hamo Hamo and the precentor, who henceforth throws his influence into take part the scale against Geoffrey; Geoffrey Muschamp, archdeacon of Cleveland, for whom the archbishop had in earlier years obtained his prebend; William Testard, archdeacon of Nottingham, who, like Hamo, had in 1190 acted as his agent at Rome ; and the archdeacon of the West Riding. ${ }^{3}$ They reached Richard before he heard from his brother, took advantage of his momentary irritation, and obtained leave to carry their appeal to Rome. Simon of Apulia was allowed at the same time Simon goes to prosecute his claim to the deanery, and the whole party proceeded to lay their complaints before Celestine III. A few days after Richard's liberation was arranged, and in March he returned to England.

With Richard's return began new complications for Richard's Geoffrey. Nottingham, the first place to which Richard England. directed his way after landing, was in Geoffrey's diocese. There Geoffrey met his brother, and was not unkindly received. He had the good sense even to avoid giving [^51]the archdeacon of Canterbury, and returned to York, c. 1586. That was perhaps the Canterbury view of the story.

He insisted on having his cross carried erect, and when Geoffrey remonstrated, somewhat insolently threw doubts on his right to be regarded as archbishop, winding up with an appeal to Rome against him. Geoffrey complained to the king, who declined to arbitrate, and recommended him not to appear with his cross at the approaching coronation for fear of a quarrel. ${ }^{2}$ This caused Geoffrey to absent himself from the coronation, but, anxious to maintain his right, he presented himself to the king at Waltham, near Portsmouth, with cross erect. It was now Hubert's turn to remonstrate, but Richard refused to settle the dispute; it was, he said, the pope's duty, not his. Hubert nursed his anger until the king was gone.

But although Richard may have been sincere in his His enemies desire of peace and goodwill to the unfortunate Geoffrey, silenced only for a every glimpse of good luck only served to enhance the ${ }^{\text {time. }}$ disappointment which uniformly followed. Hoveden himself exclaims against his folly in undertaking the sheriffdom, and throwing himself into the power of the king in a lay office. The complaints which at Nottingham and in his brother's presence he was strong enough to ignore, were only silenced for a time. The ear of the justiciar was quick, where the king had been willingly deaf. The news from Rome also was untoward, and the dean and canons were on their way home.

The archbishop of Canterbury waited some months Visitation before he took the first step in accomplishing the ruin if ittices at of the rival primate. In August or September, however, when Richard had got as far as Guienne, Hubert, in his character of justiciar, sent to York a commission of the royal judges, Earl Roger Bigot, William of Warenne, William Stuteville, Hugh Bardolf, William Briwere, Geoffrey Haget, and William FitzRichard, to hear the complaints of the canons. These barons carried matters with a high hand. The archbishop's servants who were accused of robbery they took and imprisoned; they then summoned Geoffrey himself to appear before them. ${ }^{1}$ He They take refused, took refuge in his manor at Ripon, and was of of the lands declared contumacious. The whole estates of the see, and restore with the exception of Ripon, were then taken possession of by the king's officers ; the canons were replaced in their stalls ; and although the justiciar did not venture to assume the sheriffdom or to remove Geoffrey's subsheriff, Roger of Batvent, he placed over them both, as custodes, William Stuteville and Geoffrey Haget. ${ }^{2}$ This was one of the most arbitrary and high-handed proceedings of Hubert's ministry; and hardly anything, either on moral, legal, or constitutional grounds, can be said in excuse for it. The restoration of the canons by force to the places which they had deserted, and to which they had refused to return at the orders of the archbishop, was extremely irregular; and the whole transaction is a serious blot on Hubert's fame.

Return of the appellants from Rome, September 1194

Scarcely had Geoffrey realized the blow that personal enmity had directed, when the appellants arrived in triumph from Rome. The same month, before Michaelmas, Hamo and the archdeacons of Cleveland and Nottingham presented themselves with papal letters. ${ }^{1}$ They had had indeed signal success. Simon of Apulia had been confirmed in the deanery by the pope, the sentences of excommunication issued against the canons had been annulled, and a mandate issued for the restoration of their ecclesiastical rights and properties which had been

Two commissions on the archbishop's acts issued by Celestine III. already effected by the authority of the justiciar. But this was not all: Celestine III. by letters dated May 31 had commissioned the dean of Lincoln and the archdeacons of Leicester and Northampton, to compel the archbishop not merely to restore the property, but to give satisfaction for the loss involved in the seizure of it, and empowered them to assess the damages ; ${ }^{2}$ a week after he issued a second commission to the bishop of Lincoln, the archdeacon of Northampton, and the prior of Pomfret, ${ }^{3}$ in which he rehearsed the heavy charges laid by the clergy of the province and confirmed by the evidence of thirteen abbots, eleven of them Premonstratensian, against

The delegates are empowered to hear evidence and send it sealed to Rome. If there be a lack of evidence the archbishop is to be made to find compurgators, three bishops and three abbots: if he fail to do that, notwithstanding the lack of evidence, he is to be deposed. If however he has before receiving their citation appealed to Rome, they are to give him three months' notice, at the expiration of which he must appear at Rome. A more outrageous sentence on an ex-parte statement was never issued, nor is it to be supposed that Celestine, arbitrary and violent as he was, would have condescended to such injustice except under strong pressure. It is to be feared that the measure was pressed by the whole force of the royal agents acting under Hubert Walter's direction. The fact that the eleven complaining abbots were Premonstratensians, members of an order specially affected by Hubert, ${ }^{1}$ looks like a strong confirmation of this conjecture.

But the canons had not been content with this, they Privileges had procured a privilege which was to preserve them Rome to the against all attacks, not only of Geoffrey but of any other York. archbishop; this is dated on the 16 th of June. agents would be able to guard him against a surprise. The mandate for the restoration of the canons was however published on Michaelmas day by Hugh de Puiset, ${ }^{2}$ and the report of the further measures in contemplation had the effect of hurrying Geoffrey to Normandy. He first appealed against the papal sentence and then betook himself to the king, who for a payment of 2,000 marks ordered him to be reinstated in all his rights and properties, and to be no longer molested by lay power in the exercise of his spiritual functions. This decision of Richard, dated at Mamers on the 3rd of November, ${ }^{3}$ had the effect of annulling the proceedings taken by the justiciar in September. At the same time the king at Geoffrey's instigation directed that the estates of three of the canons, Geoffrey archdeacon of Cleveland, William of Stigandby, and Master Erard, should be seized, as their title to the preferment was insufficient. These were the men whose collations had been sealed by Geoffrey as chancellor after his father's Geoffrey death ; they had turned against him the power which court. his carelessness or chicanery had placed in their hands. ${ }^{1}$ Having gained these advantages Geoffrey determined to continue by his brother's side at least until the first violence of the papal procedure should have broken, or more favourable terms could be obtained from Rome. He appointed as his officials at York Master Honorius Heappoints and Gerard de Rowell, ${ }^{2}$ on whom devolved the burden his orficial. of defending his interests in his absence. He himself did not return to England until after Richard's death.

The year 1195 opened with a tardy attempt on the Proceedings part of the judges delegate to examine into the charges $\begin{gathered}\text { of the de } \\ \text { gates } \\ \text { York in }\end{gathered}$ against the archbishop. The bishop of Lincoln and his Jork in colleagues had given Geoffrey ample time to appeal. On the 15 th of January they formally began proceedings at York, heard evidence on both sides, and in accordance with their instructions directed both parties to present themselves at Rome on the 1st of June. ${ }^{3}$ About the same Proceedings time, apparently, the other commission which was directed of the other to assess the damages of the canons held two sittings, they assess one at Torksey, the other at Ancaster, and having heard the claims of the injured parties adjudged the archbishop to pay them a thousand marks. ${ }^{*}$

A month after the opening of the commission, the new Arrival of dean, Simon of Apulia, made his appearance at York; dean. before he reached the gates he was met by a large party of citizens and clergy ; he produced letters of confirmation from both the pope and the king and insisted on being received as dean. Two of the archbishop's adherents Master John Otui, and William de Bonneville, protested against this being done until the whole controversy was settled, and in their intemperate zeal laid hands on Simon. He, in the usual way, replied by excommunication. The citizens thereupon gave way and deserted the assailants. He made his way to the minster and was received by the canons in procession on the 12th of February, and on the 15th the bishop of Durham visited the church and confirmed the sentence issued by him against the archbishop's friends. This was Hugh de Puiset's last public act; he was taken ill, on his way from York to London, at Doncaster, and died at Howden on the 3rd of March. ${ }^{1}$

[^58](Rot. Pip. 7 Rich. I.), and in the eighth year, 1196, Master Erard, the archdeacon of Cleveland, and William of Stigandby owed $100 l$. for recovering the king's favour. In this case Simon's payment at least must have been equivalent to a purchase of his preferments, but it was perhaps dictated by a sense of prospective favours.

Although Hugh de Puiset had not taken an overt part against Geoffrey since Richard's return, he had generally been found ready to help the other side. His death no doubt delivered the archbishop from a dangerous rival. It would however have been absurd in Hugh to have joined in the accusations made against Geoffrey at Rome, as nearly all of them might have been brought with much greater plausibility against himself.

Quarrel
about the consecratio of the

The absence of Geoffrey and the death of Hugh de Puiset left the north of England without a resident bishop. The approach of Easter made it an important question to what source the clergy should look for the supply of Chrism, the consecration of which ought to take place on Maundy Thursday. Geoffrey's suffragan, Bishop John of Whithern, came to York a few days before, and offered to perform the ceremony, but the dean and chapter refused his services; he went on to Southwell and did it there, the archbishop's officials undertaking the distribution of it. It is a sign of the prevalent spirit that the archdeacon of Cleveland on the receipt of the Contempt sacred substance threw it on a dunghill. The York of thrism. clergy applied to Hugh of Lincoln for a supply, but here Archdeacon Peter, the archbishop's brother, interposed and forbade the bishop to grant their request, appealing to Rome on his behalf. ${ }^{1}$

Hubert Walter had now an opportunity of showing Hubert his contempt for Geoffrey. The pope had made him on legate. the 18th of March legate of all England. His first measure under his new powers was to come and hold a visitation at York. He came as justiciar as well as legate, on the 11th of June; on the 12th his officers held Assizes ; on the 13th he visited St. Mary's and deposed He visits the abbot; and on the two following days held a council York as at which the leading members of the chapter, Simon, justiciar ${ }^{2} 119$. Hamo, and the archdeacons of Cleveland and Nottingham attended. ${ }^{2}$ The canons passed at his council are important, but they cannot be shown to have any special bearing on the state of the Church in the province, or on the quarrels with Geoffrey. Although the act of visitation was one of ostentatious contempt, it could hardly have done any harm to the latter; the legate was Results unmorally restrained from any substantial injustice ; and the only question touching Geoffrey's interests which arose on the occasion was left undecided. The archdeaconry of the West Riding, vacant by death, had been given by Geoffrey first to his brother Peter, who wisely kept out of the hornet's nest, and then to Peter of Dinan, [^59]" tiam experiri." He mentions a privilege acquired by the church of York a few years before, exempting the archbishop and the church from legatine visitation. This must have been the privilege overruled by Celestine III. in his commission to Hubert. Hoveden, iii. 291.

chancellor of Britanny. Peter of Dinan on this occasion demanded installation ; the dean and chapter insisted that the appointment under Pope Celestine's recent charter had lapsed to them; Geoffrey's officials appealed, and Hubert not seeing his way to a decision allowed their appeal to stand. ${ }^{1}$ Hubert paid a second visit to York at Christmas, but nothing seems to have been done affecting the main question. On one of these two occasions the archbishop's officials refused to receive him as legate, and were in consequence removed by him ; but on consideration he restored them, and they retained their authority until the arrival of the sentence from Rome. ${ }^{2}$ Proceedings at Rome.

In the meantime Geoffrey, in attendance on his brother, was letting matters go against him by default at both York and Rome. The 1st of June came, and he did not present himself to the pope. Celestine, unwilling to be harsh with him, prolonged the day of grace until the 18th of November. No appearance was entered then, and, a month after, definite sentence was issued; Geoffrey, as contumacious, was suspended from his spiritual functions, and the administration of the diocese was committed to the dean. Three sets of letters were despatched on the 23rd of December, to the dean, to the clergy, and to the judges delegate; the last enjoining the continuation of the inquiry and the furthering of additional evidence to Rome. ${ }^{3}$

This last injunction was probably the result of an application of the canons who were offended at the remissness of the judges delegate ; they had applied for a decree of suspension against Geoffrey, which S. Hugh had refused, declaring that he would rather be suspended himself than suspend the archbishop. ${ }^{4}$ Richard was now growing tired of his brother's company. More than once Geoffrey they had had to renew their reconciliation; but Geoffrey, king again. as imprudent as ever, bethought himself at last of rebuking Richard for his sins. This was more than the king at the moment would stand. He went into a violent passion, and directed that he should be disseized both of his archiepiscopal estates and of the sheriffdom. ${ }^{1}$

The papal mandates reached York early in 1196; the He goes to archbishop's officials were removed, the dean undertook in 1196. the spiritual jurisdiction, and for the time had reached the summit of his ambition. Geoffrey, on hearing the news, made his way at last to Rome, where he appears to have arrived in the spring. With some difficulty he obtained a hearing from Celestine, who was justly provoked at his contumacy ; that hearing, however, served materially to alter the complexion of affairs. The accusers admitted that they were unable to prove the charges, and a complete acquittal followed. New letters were The pope issued declaring the innocence of Geoffrey, and "insinua- letters in " ting" that the accusations were false and fictitious ${ }^{2}$. his favour.

Richard's indignation at this news seems to prove Richard that his previous show of reconciliation, however often opposest the $\begin{gathered}\text { restran } \\ \text { of the arch. }\end{gathered}$ repeated, was insincere, and that his sole purpose bishop. throughout the struggle was to wring money from Geoffrey ; whilst they were friends be extorted it in one way, when they quarrelled he confiscated the estates of the see. He now saw that the papal acquittal would make Geoffrey practically independent of him; he immediately directed that the sentence should be ignored, and took upon himself the bestowal of the vacant preferments. Geoffrey hearing this, returned from France, Geoffrey which he had already reached on his way home, and to Romes again retired to Rome. ${ }^{3}$ We lose sight of him for some time : he probably remained, if not at Rome, out of Richard's

[^61]Rumours of reach for more than a year. During this time very untoward reports were brought to England. Ralph of Wigetoft, Geoffrey's agent at Rome, being on his deathbed, confessed to the pope that he had sent forged letters to England. Celestine warned Hubert Walter of this, and by his commands Roger of Ripon, the bearer of Ralph's letters, was arrested, and a quantity of poison found upon him. This he declared his master had given him to poison Dean Simon, who accordingly was summoned to London; the poison, in the shape of gold rings and a belt, was presented to him, and, with the letters, burnt at Tothill fields. The bearer of them was imprisoned. The story, of which the details are very suspicious, was made a ground for new charges against Geoffrey. ${ }^{1}$

The peremptory action of Richard decided the struggle for the York preferments against the archbishop, whose absence in 1196 lost him some very fine windfalls. Bouchard de Puiset died, and poor Hamo was again disappointed of the treasurership; the king gave it to Master Eustace the keeper of his seal; William de Chimeli was made a bishop, and the archdeaconry of Richmond was likewise bestowed on Eustace. Peter de Ros, archdeacon of Carlisle, died and his stall was given to Aimeri Thebert, nephew of the new bishop of Durham, who had succeeded Bouchard in his Durham preferment. ${ }^{2}$ In all these cases Geoffrey's claims were passed over, and the chapter did not venture to assert their right against the king. Richard further nominated Adam of Thornovere, Geoffrey's old servant and recent opponent, to the archdeaconry of the West Riding; but Peter of Dinan, whom the archbishop himself had appointed, managed also to obtain a nomination from the king. The two claimants thereupon agreed to divide the revenues of the

[^62]office, and to occupy the archdeacon's stall, when they both happened to be in York, on alternate days. ${ }^{1}$

Matters languished on until the spring of 1198 ; and Richard's Richard then set himself in earnest to remedy the dis- 1198 to regraceful state of anarchy which had so long prevailed. $\begin{gathered}\text { concenilit the } \\ \text { and } \\ \text { and the the }\end{gathered}$ Early in the year he summoned Geoffrey to court, to canons. meet the dean and canons. Geoffrey arrived first, found Richard placable, and made his peace with him once more, Richard on this occasion promising that he would not again interfere with the bestowal of his patronage. He also granted him full restitution, and sent one of his clerks with Honorius, Geoffrey's official, to England to enforce it. Geoffrey was not to return immediately to England, but to go to Rome on the king's business ; he set off for Rome; two days after his departure the dean Defeated by and canons arrived at court, and so worked on the king that he delayed the restitution of the archbishopric until Geoffrey's return ; and this done, not being anxious to face the archbishop, they hastened back in triumph to York. ${ }^{2}$

Several events were now making it extremely neces- New atsary that a decision should be come to. Celestine III. king's part. was dead, and Innocent III. was likely to look upon matters with much clearer eyes than his predecessor. Hubert Walter's influence with Richard was becoming smaller, and within a few months he had to resign the justiciarship. The promotion of Eustace the chancellor, and Geoffrey Muschamp, opened again the question of the preferments. ${ }^{3}$ The news of the pope's death seems to have stopped Geoffrey on his way to Rome ; he returned to the king to Andely, and Simon and the canons were recalled to meet him. ${ }^{4}$ Richard proposed an arbi- He proposes tration; the archbishop of Rouen and the bishops of tion. Their arguments weighed with Richard more than can be accounted for, if he were moved by argument alone. He broke off the negotiation and sent back the canons more jubilant than ever. ${ }^{1}$

The treasurership and archdeaconries of Richmond and Cleveland were now vacant. The first of these was at last handed over to Hamo, and the precentorship vacated by his promotion was given to Reginald Arundel. The archdeaconry of Richmond Geoffrey bestowed on his official Honorius, exacting from him, however, the concession of the right of institution to benefices, a peculiar right of the archdeaconry given in the time of Henry I. as compensation for the loss of the jurisdiction in the new diocese of Carlisle. ${ }^{2}$ Honorius had been until now a faithful servant of Geoffrey ; on his promotion he, like Simon of Apulia and with a somewhat similar excuse, turned against him and involved him in another long litigation. this, and on Hugh's presenting himself in the choir, he $\begin{gathered}\mathrm{Ho} \text { is ex. } \\ \text { communi- }\end{gathered}$ ordered the candles to be extinguished and stopped the cated. service.

On the failure of the negotiations at Andely, Geoffrey Return of proceeded to Rome and laid his case before the new Gome trey to pope. Innocent III. saw through the duplicity of the nocent III king, the unscrupulous craft of Simon, and the wrongheadedness of Geoffrey; he wrote to Richard begging him to be reconciled with his brother, and holding out an indistinct threat of interdict if he should not. Richard Failur of a thereupon made a last attempt at compromise ; he sent promise. the bishops of Durham, Ely, Winchester, Worcester, and Bath to propose peace; Geoffrey was to confirm the king's gifts; the king would then restore him to his see. ${ }^{1}$ Geoffrey demurred; would the mediating bishops put their advice on record that it might go sealed to the pope? They refused, and the treaty was again broken off. Geoffrey returned to Rome and obtained a decision Letters of in his favour on all points. The king's agents reported restoration. to him that this was to be enforced by interdict. Before, however, the letters were issued, April 28, 1199, Richard was dead. Geoffrey had advanced eight days' journey Death of the from Rome when he heard of it ; he returned, to make ${ }^{\text {king. }}$ assurance doubly sure, to the holy city. ${ }^{2}$

Much of the interest of the contest now terminates. Relations of John, at all events at this period of his life, did not dis- Geoffirey. like Geoffrey so much as Richard had done. The difference in their age, probably, precluded the feeling of personal rivalry, which had embittered the relations of Richard with a brother, whose early exploits and military accomplishments were little inferior to his own. In the great struggle of 1191 John had taken the part of Geoffrey, and before the papal sentence in his favour reached England, the change of sovereign had had the effect of [^65]improving the archbishop's prospects. Honorius was immediately received as archdeacon of Richmond; ${ }^{1}$ Simon thereupon excommunicated him, and John was obliged peremptorily to direct the status quo to be observed until he should be able to decide. His decision, promulgated a few weeks after his coronation, was in Geoffrey's favour. Whilst still in England he ordered that the archbishop's manors should be restored as soon as he returned.

The brothers met at Rouen on the 24th of June; several of the canons placed their presentations in the hands of Geoffrey as having been illegally acquired, and he proceeded to readjust them as equitably as he could. Adam of Thornovere, the dean Simon, the new precentor, and others still held out. ${ }^{2}$

Cardinal Peter of Capua had been sent by Innocent to arrange, if possible, the many causes of discontent and trouble now operating in both England and France, and so pave the way to a new crusade. Under his influence the two parties agreed to accept as arbitrators the bishop of Lincoln and Master Columb, the pope's subdeacon; but the influence of Hubert Walter and Geoffrey FitzPeter was used to prevent the completion of any arrangement, and mutual recriminations at first seemed the only result. ${ }^{3}$

At last, towards the end of the year 1200, a formal peace was concluded at Westminster. Bishop Herbert of Salisbury and abbot Alan of Tewkesbury, the last judges delegate appointed by the pope, were accepted as arbitrators: after long discussion Geoffrey received to the kiss of peace, first, his old ungrateful servant William Testard, then Reginald Arundel the precentor, and at last Dean Simon himself. Personal enmity being at an end, all further questions were to be settled in the chapter-house at York. ${ }^{4}$

[^66]The great ecclesiastical dispute ends here. The peace Quarrel of settled no principle, for no principle was involved in the wiotirey John. quarrel. It would be well if we could assert that Geoffrey had learned wisdom and moderation by it. But this was not the case. A month was scarcely over when he had rushed into a quarrel with John. The king had summoned him to go to France ; he had neglected to obey; he had refused to let his tenants pay the carucage ; John was provoked; he was again dispossessed by the sheriff of Yorkshire, his own tenure of the sheriffdom having at last expired ; and he retaliated by excommunicating not only the sheriff and all his abettors, but all those who had irritated the king against him. At the same time he excommunicated the townsmen of Beverley for breaking into his park. ${ }^{1}$

John, acting under good advice, tried to avoid another Moderation struggle. The archbishop in resisting the royal ex- thisonoco onactions would have a strong party on his side, the same party, in fact, that he had formerly alienated by the exactions he had made in the interest of Richard ; the king ordered his estates to be restored on the understanding that he should give an account of himself before the Curia Regis, and pay a sum of three thousand marks which he owed king Richard. ${ }^{2}$ Some insults offered by his servants to John, on his visit to Beverley in January 1201, embittered matters still further, but at Midlent he Geoffrey received his brother at York and made peace again with pir fircasessur. a pecuniary fine ; and in May John issued a full charter of restitution in return for a promise of a thousand pounds sterling, for the payment of which the archbishop pledged his barony to the king. ${ }^{3}$

At this point Hoveden's chronicle ends ; but we leave New quarGeoffrey, although reconciled with John, again engaged the chap wither. in a struggle with the chapter. The suit of Honorius was still being prosecuted. ${ }^{4}$ Reginald of Arundel the precentor was dead; Geoffrey nominated a new one; the dean objected. Geoffrey appointed his official, Ralph of Kyme, to the archdeaconry of Cleveland, which he had unwisely left unclaimed since 1198 ; the dean declared that it had lapsed, and that the chapter had presented Hugh Murdac. Geoffrey insisted on installing Ralph; Simon insisted that only the precentor could lawfully install, and now there was no precentor. So Geoffrey excommunicated Hugh Murdac, whom two years before the dean had excommunicated as his partizan. ${ }^{1}$ Next the provost of Beverley died. Geoffrey appointed his brother Morgan; Simon appealed against this on the ground that the archbishop had promised the reversion of the provostship to himself, the bitterest, most ungrateful, most unscrupulous of his foes ! ${ }^{2}$ Atmosphere of Hoveden's last days.

Such was the atmosphere in which the last days of Roger Hoveden were spent; an atmosphere so redolent of curses that one cannot wonder at his belief that the devil was just then unloosed. Reflexions on the story are needless.

Archbishop Geoffrey lived for more than ten years after our chronicle closes. His struggles with the dean and canons continue, but they are lost sight of in the more important contests into which he was forced by John's unconstitutional demands for money. He never again was brought so low as he had been under Richard, but in 1207 he was compelled to choose between unconditional submission to John and exile. He chose the latter; left England, rather than pay the sums demanded by the king, and never returned. He died in 1212, and was buried in the church of the order of Grandmont, Notre Dame du Parc, in the neighbourhood of Rouen. ${ }^{3}$

[^68]His character has been variously read; all things con- Charater of sidered he seems to have resembled Richard in his nobler Geofirises. traits and in his least repulsive faults; to have been generous, impulsive, and open-hearted; his sufferings were the result, firstly, of his unhappy position, laying him open to insult and extortion, and increasing his natural irritability ; secondly, of that thoughtless, violent, impracticable temperament, which made him the victim of unscrupulous opponents, and which seemed to justify the oppressiveness of his brothers and the ingratitude of his servants. Like Ishmael, his hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him. Otherwise he left behind him the reputation of personal temperance and a pure life. ${ }^{1}$
II. The special importance of the ministerial career of ConstituArchbishop Hubert Walter arises from the facts, first, 鹪rananece of that being the nephew pupil, and confidential friend of Wubert that being the nephew, pupil, and confidential friend of ministry. Ranulf Glanvill, the prime minister of Henry II., and having occupied a position involving constant and close intercourse with that king during the latter years of his life, he must be regarded as the most likely person to have had a thorough acquaintance with the principles that guided the reforms of Henry's reign, and as probably developing those principles in the changes or improvements which he adopted when he was himself practically supreme; and, secondly, that the period during which he either exercised the authority of the crown as justiciar, or in his offices of chancellor, archbishop, and legate, brought his powerful influence to bear on the sovereign as well as the people, was the last [^69]Importance of the transitional period preceding Magna Carts.

Hubert's relations with Richard and John.
period of orderly government that preceded the granting of Magna Carta. On Hubert's death the regular administration of the country was thrown out of gear by the tyrannical conduct of John, who had felt himself under the influence of his minister, as long as he lived, to a degree which mere gratitude and the sense of his usefulness can only insufficiently explain. Hubert's advice had been with Richard all-powerful ; with John it had a certain weight, sufficient to modify if not to overrule his self-willed behaviour ; he exercised a control, the removal of which was felt by the king as a great relief, whilst the nation, with whom, as his master's servant, he had never been popular, found almost immediately that in him they had lost their best friend, the only bulwark strong enough to resist or to break the attack of royal despotism.

In tracing through the measures of Hubert and the men of his school, certain steps of growth and development which connect the legal reforms of Henry II. with the improved sense of public law and national right that find their expression in the great Charter, I am not so rash as to claim for him the character of a great politician, or even a consciously intentional programme for the education of the people for the exercise of selfgovernment. The utmost that could be predicated of him in that direction would be that he was wise enough to see that an extension of self-agency on the part of the people in the lines in which they were accustomed to act for local business, was a pledge of peace and good behaviour ; that the more they could be made to perceive that every man has a stake in the public weal, and may take a share in the maintenance of the public peace, the more certain would be the dependence of the commonwealth on the people; the more thorough and lasting the peace, the safer and quieter the country, the more ready and the more able it would be to supply the wants of the crown.

The growth of our constitution was never, at least character during the middle ages, sensibly affected by philo- of consstitu- gress ino sophical or doctrinaire views. The several steps of Eress ind. growth have been almost always of a character that might seem accidental, were it not that even in their most experimental forms they testify to an increasing confidence on the part of the rulers, in the wisdom of trusting to the people, and a corresponding sense on the people's part, of the wisdom of a just and moderate use of their powers, as the surest way to retain and increase them. For example, in the process by which the custom of county representation,-itself being, as the concentration of all local machinery, the basis of English self-govern-ment,-reached its growth, no step is more certain or important than that by which the principle of electing knights representative to choose the grand juries and recognitors of the assizes was introduced. Yet no one will for a moment think of asserting that that custom was introduced in order to make a conscious advance towards the working out of the principles of liberty. Neither when we regard the custom of assessment by jury, as a step in the education of the people towards taking the command of the national purse, do we for a moment contemplate that education as a purpose in the mind of the ministers who originated the plan. The result is not accidental, because it sprang from the increase of confidence between the governors and the governed, and proceeded by the evolution of principles, the working of which we can trace, in measures which suggested themselves as the readiest for the moment and occasion ; but were it not for this, it might seem as if the end and the means had only the most casual connexion. And so throughout the whole story. The English constitution owes all in it that is peculiar to itself to the accumulation of precedents that were found to answer other ends than those for which they were originally devised; it is full of anomalies and abounds in checks and counterchecks which would be intolerable in an ideal polity; its history is a very chapter of accidents and experiments until it is read in the light of this truth.

As law took the place of despotism, and organization succeeded to routine; as peace and security increased wealth, and the consciousness of wealth made peace and security more precious ; as the people educated themselves by the exercise of their judicial and economical powers on a small scale, for the exercise of the same powers on a great scale; the advance towards a more or less perfect system of self-government was found to be rapidly accelerating. The source of the advance was in the deeper current to which the outward and visible signs of it were ascribable ; signs, the relation of which to the main result was on a superficial view little else than accidental. But the actual result was shaped by those signs. In the strong conservatism of English politics every such sign is incorporated and perpetuated. The expedient of to-day is a precedent for all time ; if it fails it is not cast aside and a new one devised, but its failure is remedied by some new and special contrivance which in its turn is incorporated, is found to answer some other end, and is perpetuated too. The structure, however inconvenient, is not demolished and rebuilt, but a room is added here and a passage there; the chapel of the old house becomes the muniment room of the new; the presence chamber of the old palace, a mere passage to the halls and courts of the full-grown edifice ; but every original chamber remains, and without it the structure would not be, as it would not have become, what it is. With the superficial student and the empiric politician, it is too common to relegate the investigation of such changes to the domain of archæology. I shall not attempt to rebut the imputation; only if such things are archæology, then archæology is bistory; and that is as much as its most fervent students would ask for it. If by archæology is meant the science of the Constituobsolete, I deny that they are archæological; it is only tiona nit to the plucked flower that the root is archæologically sical. related. The healthy nation has a memory as well as aspirations involved in the consciousness of its identity ; it has a past no less living than its future. Even the energy that is based on reform and repentance cannot afford to think of that past as the dead burying its dead.

Hubert Walter undertook the office of Great Justiciar Hubert's at the beginning of the year 1194, and retained it until junsticiar as and , chancellor. the middle of the year 1198. On John's accession he became chancellor, and continued in that post until his death, exercising, however, through his important position as legate and archbishop, an amount of authority that no chancellor before him had enjoyed, and scarcely inferior to what he had possessed as justiciar. It is to his career, however, as justiciar that the following remarks chiefly apply. That portion of his history is the one illustrated by Hoveden, and it is also the one in which such principles of administration as he had find their freest expression.

The principal events of this administration were, in Summary the first year of it, the collecting of the large sum to be ervene of paid for Richard's ransom, the management of the king histratiation. himself during his visit to England, and the judicial iter of 1194. The year 1195 is marked by the archbishop's appointment as legate, and the circumstances which attended his first exercise of his new powers. Hoveden's pages are filled with the troubles of Archbishop Geoffrey, and the only significant constitutional measures are those taken for the maintenance of the public peace. In the year 1196 come the design of remodelling the Exchequer administration, the riot of William FitzOsbert, and Hubert's first threat of resignation. The assize of measures is the only important act of the year 1197. The following year is remarkable for the successful opposition of S. Hugh of Lincoln to an unconstitutional the assessment and collection of the carucage ; and for the withdrawal of the archbishop from the office of justiciar. As all these events are given by Hoveden in detail, and as his account of them is not to any important extent complicated by the statements of contemporaries, it is not necessary to reproduce it in this place. It will be Judicial and sufficient if I attempt, under the two heads of judicial finanicial financial business. and financial business, to point out the bearings of Hubert's policy, and to show the way in which his measures were tending to the end of self-government.

Magna Carta being the translation into the language of the thirteenth century of the ideas of the eleventh, through the forms of the twelfth, we may naturally look for some significant transitional data in the policy of a minister with such antecedents as those of Hubert Walter.

1. Financial The financial history comes first both in place and collection of. Richard's ransom. importance. The effort that England made for the ransom of Richard far transcended anything of the kind that had taken place before. It comprised all the ancient devices for procuring supplies, and formed a precedent for new ones. The proceedings by which it was carried out fall partly in the year 1193 and partly in 1194, for the aids demanded by Richard in person in the latter year were probably intended to complete the sum required of him, although it cannot be said with any certainty that they were so applied; and it is not quite clear, from either the language of the chroniclers or the public records, how the disposal of the funds levied in 1193 is to be distinguished from that of $1194 .{ }^{1}$

Unprecedented as the occasion was, it does not appear to have led the way to any national deliberation on ways and means. Richard wrote urgently to his principal barons and prelates, but the responsibility of the budget was undertaken by queen Eleanor and the justices; they demanded a scutage from the tenants by knight service, a hidage or carucage from all tenants in socage, a grant of a fourth part of revenue and goods from all persons whatsoever, by way of donum or aid; the wool of the Cistercians and Gilbertines, and the gold, silver, and jewels of the churches. The "communis assensus" ${ }^{1}$ which admitted the demand, must be

Geoffrey demanded a fourth part of the revenue of the canons of York. In the history of the council of Nottingham in 1194 he specifies the king's demand of the carucage, iii. 242. Yet the mention of the scutage and carucage occurs first in the Pipe Roll of 1194. Is it possible that the imposts raised in 1193 were collected by some process different from the ordinary one of the Exchequer? It was certainly entrusted to special officers (vol. iii. 212), but it is more probable that the measures of 1194 were merely the legal carrying out of the plan devised in 1193, than that two scutages should be collected for the same purpose in two successive years, of which only one should be mentioned in the national accounts. William of Newburgh expatiates on the disappointment that was felt at the insufficiency of the sums first raised: "Putabatur attributed not to the vote of any general assembly, but to the feeling of common helplessness. The aid was one of the three customary aids, and even under Magna Carta might be taken without reference to the common council of the realm.

Thescutage. (1.) In demanding a scutage of $20 s$. on the knight's fee the justices did not go beyond the average rate of scutage. The rate in the 33 rd of Henry II. was the same, and the three other scutages raised in Richard's reign were also 20 s. on the knight's fee. John's first scutage was raised to two marks. The sum thus levied must have amounted to not less than 25,000 l. if rigorously collected; but it was probably assessed on the old system, and if so would not amount to more than 12,0006. ${ }^{1}$ or carcuaze. (2.) The hidage or carucage, if levied at $2 s$, on the hide or carucate, must have been nearly the same in amount as the ancient Danegeld $;{ }^{2}$ and produced a sum of about $5,000 \mathrm{l}$. This sort of impost had been levied during Henry II.'s reign, generally under the name of donum, and as supplementary to the scutage.
The hidage
an additional presumption that Hoveden's statements refer generally to the imposts raised in the two years for the purpose. See the last note.
${ }^{1}$ If we compare the account given by Madox from the Pipe Rolls of the sums paid as scutage in 1172 with those paid in 1194, we shall find them nearly identical; e.g. in both cases the archbishop of York pays 20l. for his knights, William Fossard $31 l .10$ s., and so on. If the same sums were paid, no doubt the same deductions were made, and the same compositions held good. The scutage of 1194 would thus produce no more than those of Henry II.'s reign, This enables us to understand the relief given by the 44th article of the Magna Carta of 1217, "Scutagium " capiatur de cetero sicut capi con" suevit tempore Henrici regis avi " nostri;" John's scutages having been larger in amount and arbitrarily imposed. Madox, Hist. Exch. pp. 411, 441.
${ }^{2}$ On the hypothesis stated in the last note. For instance, the hidage of 1194 was in Somerset $293 l$. 18s. 2d.; in Dorset, 241l. 3s. 9d. The Danegeld levied in 1156 was, in Somerset, 277l. 10s. 4 d .; and in Dorset, 228l. 5s. The difference might be accounted for by either the reclaiming of waste or the varying number of persons excused. Madox, Hist. Exch. pp. 411, 412, 476, 477, &c.
(3.) The grant of a fourth part of revenue and mo- The grant of bilia may be contrasted with the two particulars just revenue and mentioned. It no doubt took this form in consequence of the urgency of the occasion, and was the source of the largest portion of the sum achieved. Although revenue and personal property had been long liable to taxation in the shape of talliage and donum ; this appears to be the first occasion on which they were subjected directly to central taxation. The Dialogus de Scaccario describes the two methods of determining the incidence of talliage ; per capita, ${ }^{1}$ poll tax, or local assessment. Here, however, we have a direct demand of the central authority on the individual. The principle was, however, not quite a novelty although the form was so. The Precedents assize of the Saladin tithe formed the precedent for de- for this, $\begin{gathered}\text { forst } \\ \text { its } \\ \text { imp }\end{gathered}$ manding a fixed portion of each man's goods, and the its impe as a $a$ assize of arms brought personal property under direct contribution for the national defence. Either of these ordinances would also have afforded a precedent for an equitable method of assessment by a jury of the venue ; but we have no authority that shows it to have been followed on this occasion. This impost is the precedent for the grants of subsidies in the shape of tithes, sevenths, thirteenths, fifteenths, and other proportions, which in the next century largely supersede the earlier methods of taxation.
(4.) The demand of the wool of the Cistercians and Gilbertines is an important precedent also for the raising of revenue on and through the staple article of English production.
(5.) The demand of the treasures of the churches, an Payments in 1194.

expedient which, although occasionally threatened by our other sovereigns, ${ }^{1}$ was not actually repeated until the days of Henry VIII., is a sign of the enormous effort made by the government on this occasion, too enormous to be taken as a safe precedent. Unfortunately we have no clue whatever to the actual proportions of the required sum made up from these three last sources. The country endured the united pressure of taxes which had never been imposed before at the same moment, and of some that were never proposed again. England, although the largest and wealthiest part, was far from being the whole, of the area to be taxed ${ }^{2}$; and yet either because the money was not honestly applied, or because the produce fell short of the estimates, considerable arrears of the ransom were unpaid in 1195.
In the council of Nottingham in 1194 Richard demanded a carucage of 2 s . on the carucate; as the mention of hidage comes into the Pipe Rolls only in this year, we must conclude that this was the occasion on which this portion of the revenue applied to the ransom

[^72]This may have been, however, only the English contribution in transitu. Further on, p. 172, William Poignart renders account of the receipt of 4,000 marks raised by talliage on the town of Caen for the king's ransom, an enormous sum. The citizens of London in 1194 owed 1,500 marks of donum, " pro bene" volentia domini regis et pro liber"tatibus suis conservandis et de " auxilio suo ad redemptionem do" mini regis" (Madox, 412), a statement which shows that they were determined to get all they could for their money. It is very unfortunate that all our information on this most important business is fragmentary.
was granted. The language of Hoveden leads to the Their sup. conclusion that in form it was an innovation. ${ }^{1}$ On the clementary same occasion he asked for the wool of the Cistercians, who compounded for it with a fine. Probably in this case also the negotiation was supplementary to that of the year 1193. The king further demanded a third of the military service of the country to go with him to Normandy. If I am right in supposing that both the scutage and the carucage were collected on the ancient assessments which had been in use in Henry II.'s reign, the largest part of the burden of the ransom must have been defrayed from the donum of the fourth part of revenue and personal property, the most oppressive and general of the imposts ; and we may attribute to the inquisitorial and universal pressure of this exaction, the discontent with the fiscal administration which seems to have followed, as well as the urgent measure of reform which the justiciar attempted later in the year.
The judicial iter of 1194 was the necessary consequence Fiscal of Richard's return and of the restoration of the govern- ineasurves in mental machinery. Like the similar proceedings under the iter of Henry II. it was directed with a view to fiscal advantage; the inquest of sheriffs of $1170^{2}$ was followed as a precedent; exact inquiry was made into the escheats, patronage, wardships, and other feudal incidents, and into the debts and available property of John. Strict directions were given for the re-stocking of the lands in the royal possession, and for the supervision of the commercial and monetary dealings of the Jews. A talliage A talliage of cities, towns, and demesne lands was also ordered. ${ }^{3}$ A measure, however, of far greater importance which the justiciar proposed, the examination into the accounts of receipts taken by the sheriffs, bailiffs, foresters, and other servants of the Exchequer, since the beginning of the reign, was deferred. ${ }^{1}$ Such an examination would no doubt have shown the very great discrepancy between the sums collected by the local officers and those which were paid into the treasury; would have proved the often suspected fact that the system of ferm or composition was ruinous to the exchequer, which lost the benefit of such increments as would arise from the extension of cultivated lands and improvement in agriculture ; and would have demonstrated the necessity of a new and general system of assessment. It was defeated, however, probably by the influence of the fiscal officers; although Richard was in the greatest straits for money, and even raising funds by granting licences for tournaments which had the year before been forbidden by the pope. ${ }^{2}$

The Pipe Rolls of 1195 testify to the collection of a scutage for the army of Normandy imposed in the seventh year of Richard, and those of 1196 to a third scutage imposed in the eighth year; both of these were of the same amount, 20 s. on the knight's fee. ${ }^{3}$ Neither of these is noticed directly by Hoveden. In the latter year the king was so much dissatisfied with his receipts from England that he renewed the proposition for a visitation of the Exchequer, and, greatly against the archbishop's wishes, sent over the abbot of Caen, a clerk well

[^74]versed in the method of business pursued in the Norman It is again exchequer, to make inquiry into the receipts of the royal dereated. officers. ${ }^{1}$ The carrying out of a measure which, however necessary, would be very distasteful to the officials, was again impeded, this time by the death of the commissioner to whom it was confided. The abbot died at London a few days after his arrival.

We may conjecture that Richard was prompted to Discontent this proposition chiefly by his own necessities, but he of the people may partly have been influenced by the condition of state of the popular opinion, which insisted that whilst the nation was heavily burdened the crown was poor, and that the fault must be laid upon the ministry. This feeling found its expression in the revolt of William FitzOsbert or Longbeard, ${ }^{2}$ which broke out shortly after the death of the abbot of Caen. The ostensible reason of the disturbance was the unfairness of the assessment for the taxes payable by the citizens of London. Hoveden, who seems william to have regarded the grievance as a real one, distinctly $\begin{gathered}\text { Fitzosbert's } \\ \text { movement. }\end{gathered}$ states that it was caused first by the frequency of the imposts, and secondly by the fact that, owing to the craft of the richer citizens, the main part of the burden fell on the poor. That the higher rank of citizens had the power of doing this, either by raising the sums demanded per capita, ${ }^{1}$ or by unfairly assessing the poorer people, is indeed clear. It is probable, moreover, that the ruling body was in close connexion with the Exchequer, ${ }^{2}$ the monetary dealings of which brought them in contact; and that the justiciar, on interfering in the dispute, took their side too strongly. That William Longbeard was an ordinary demagogue, a deserter of the ranks with which his birth naturally associated him, may also be true $;^{3}$ but the fact of the grievance is not impugned by such a consideration. The archbishop, after he had raised enormous sums for Richard, found that he was discontented; the people refused to believe that all the money raised reached the royal coffers; the system of the exchequer and the vested interests of the sheriffs were too strong to be broken down, and the method of taxation was becoming obsolete. The archbishop, weary with the odious work, teased to death by his monks, who had now appealed to Rome against him on account of the pollution of Bow church, where William Longbeard was seized, offered to resign the justiciarship. After urgent remonstrance from Richard he withdrew the offer. Hoveden tells us that during the two preceding years he had collected for the king not less than 1,100,000 marks of silver, a statement which must be erroneous, ${ }^{4}$ but the fact that the wording of Magna Carta, in the clauses that touch this question, is borrowed from it. It was found too severe for the commercial spirit of the country to bear, and was set aside by the justices early in the reign of John. ${ }^{2}$

[^75]distinctly connects the two events:

We come thus to the year 1198, a year signalized by at least two highly important events. In the great council of the nation assembled at Oxford early in the Opposition year, ${ }^{3}$ Hubert announced a demand of the king that the Hubert, to Hubert's barons should furnish him with a force of 300 knights, to be paid three shillings a day each. Two of the bishops, S. Hugh of Lincoln, who represented at the time the religious party in England, and the old school of liberty for which S. Anselm and Thomas Becket had contended ; and Herbert of Salisbury, ${ }^{4}$ who represented the older

According to the computation of the learned baron, the sum must be multiplied by three to find the present value in silver, and then by twenty to ascertain its value in exchange for produce. This would make the sum annually raised by Hubert equal to $22,000,000 l$. of our money, which is quite inconceivable. If the sum had been given in figures we might suspect that a cypher too many was inserted, and that we should read 110,000 marks, or $73,333 \mathrm{l} .6 \mathrm{~s} .8 \mathrm{~d}$., but this would be much less than would be probable. Altogether the passage defies explanation, except on the ground that mediæval statements of number, except in strictly legal documents, cannot be interpreted with any approach to exactness.

${ }^{4}$ Herbert of Salisbury, called le Poor, was the son of Richard, archdeacon of Poictiers, that is, Richard of Ilchester, the clerk of the Ex. chequer to Henry II., and afterchequer to Henry II., and afterwards bishop of Winchester. This is, I think, proved by the documents printed in Madox's Formulare Anglicanum, pp. 47,52. It is curious that he should be known by the name of Poor, a name which certainly seems to imply some connexion with Roger le Poor of Salisbury and so with Nigel of Ely, Richard Fitz Neal and the chan-

Opposition in the National Council to a new impost.

The carucage of 1198
traditions of the Exchequer; opposed the grant, and the archbishop was obliged in chagrin to withdraw his proposition, although it was supported by the bishop of London, the treasurer. Whatever were the grounds of the opposition of S. Hugh, ecclesiastical or constitutional, this occurrence is a landmark in English constitutional history. It may be placed on a par with S. Thomas's opposition to Henry II. in 1163 at Woodstock, but it is the first clear case of the refusal of a money grant demanded directly by the crown, and a most valuable precedent for future times.
The other mark of the year is the plan devised for the collection of a carucage. ${ }^{1}$ This impost was probably intended to redress the balance between the tenants in knight service, who had lately paid two scutages, and the tenants in socage, who had not been taxed for four years; and this may account for the fact that it was fixed at five shillings on the carucate, more than double the rate collected in 1194. A still more important innovation was the determination that every hundred acres

tion of a uniform for a variable measurement. should be regarded as a carucate. ${ }^{2}$ Formerly the word was strictly interpreted to mean the land that could be cultivated with a single plough, and of course, according to the character of the soil, the extent varied indefinitely. The substitution of a uniform for a variable carucate ${ }^{3}$ was cellor, Roger le Poor. If this be so, then we have the family exercising a sort of hereditary judicial and fiscal influence for nearly a century and a half, Richard le Poor, bishop of Durham, dying in 1257.
${ }^{1}$ Hoveden, iv. 46, 47.
${ }^{2}$ According to the Dialogus de Scaccario, i. 17, the hide was a hundred acres, that is, it was regarded by the time of Henry II. as of that extent. This act of Hubert then identifies the carucate henceforth with the hide, as far as concerns extension. In the same spirit of definition the prices of cows, pigs, sheep, \&c., the animalia pacabilia, are fixed, instead of being allowed to vary according to the size or condition of the animal. See the seventh clause of the XXIII ${ }^{\text {d }}$. article of the assize of 1194. Hoveden, iii. 265, 266.
${ }^{3}$ A parallel case to the variable carucate is the variable oxgang which subsisted in the last century : " Each field (of the common fields " of Pickering) consisted of 22 a great advantage to the Exchequor, and the allowance Remeasureof a hundred acres to the plough was not an illiberal templated. measure towards the cultivators.

But a consequence of greater importance resulted from the change ; the land in cultivation must be remeasured. The old hidage measurement of Domesday must be given up with all its machinery of deductions and excuses; and for this purpose was to be employed the plan of assessment by jury, of which the Domesday record was the most valuable precedent, but which since Domesday ${ }^{1}$ had been used only for the assessment of income and personal property. To collect this tax the king sent Method of through each county of England a clerk and a knight, the caruwho, with the sheriff and lawful knights chosen for the purpose, sworn to fulfil the king's business faithfully, caused to come before them the stewards of the barons of the county, and from every township the lord or bailiff of the township, and the reeve with four men of the township, whether free or villein, and two lawful knights of the hundred, who swore that they would faithfully and without fraud declare how many wainages of ploughs there were in each township, how many in demesne, how many in villenage, how many in alms; and on the wainage of each plough they imposed first two shillings and afterwards three. The account was written in four rolls, kept by the clerk, the knight, the sheriff, and the stewards of the barons respectively. The money was received by two knights and the bailiff of each hundred ; they accounted for it to the sheriff, and the sheriff accounted for it at the Exchequer. ${ }^{2}$ The plan contains several other minute directions, but the above are enough to show that the principle of representation for the purpose of assessment was fully recognized as applicable to real property, whilst the mention of the chosen knights, who in each county were to superintend the proceeding, points to the speedy approach of a time when the ideas of representation and election were to be permanently united. The setting aside the great and venerable assessment book of William the Conqueror for a new valuation to be made by the representatives of the taxpayers was surely a long step towards the exercise by the taxpayers of a direct hold on the determination of taxation. When the elected knights who now superintended the valuation should be called to the royal councils, and there take part in the voting of the impost, the constitutional fabric would come not far off its rough completion. Within less than twenty years the principle which involved this result was to be admitted.

Importance of this act.

Unfortunately the records of the Exchequer do not enable us to say whether this elaborate plan was carried out in its integrity ; but it remains a singular link between Domesday Book and Magna Carta, and a most important precedent. An examination of the documents contained in the Fodera and Parliamentary Writs, ${ }^{1}$ on [^80]by the stewards of the barons; in the sixth, the thirtieth of 1237, the knights collectors are nominated, the local assessors, the reeve and four elected men. In the last case, the talliage of 1304 , the collection is made simply by the king's officers. The comparison shows the maintenance of the royal authority in cases of strictly feudal taxation, such as scutage and talliage ; and the employment of election and representation in both the collection and assessment of the non-feudal or national, such as carucage and the taxes by rate of tenth, thirteenth, &c.

the question of assessment and collection of taxes, caru- Importance cages, thirteenths, fifteenths, and the like, shows how of of ssemses from time to time the main principle was varied, until, a hundred years exactly from this date, the right of the commons to representation, and the right of the parliament to regulate taxation, being admitted, the details of the arrangement by which men's minds were prepared and educated for the work, sank into secondary importance.

If we suppose that the difficulties of the task thus undertaken were greater than Hubert Walter was able of Halter. to meet, we may be not very far wrong. The day fixed for the return of the new valuation was the 31st of May; before the 14th of July he had resigned, and his successor was appointed. The first act of the new administration was to order a new iter of the judges, and this was accompanied by a new and more stringent publication of the forest assize. The impost of the carucage was stringent resisted by a portion of the monastic clergy, and a mea- action or the sure of practical outlawry against the whole clerical body nistration. was needed to enforce the payment. This severe act was the first sign of the change in the spirit of the government. ${ }^{1}$ Another was the augmentation of the scutage and carucage at the beginning of the reign of John, ${ }^{2}$ followed by the speedy and heavy increase of taxation which in 1207 culminated in the demand of a thirteenth, Character of and caused the exile of archbishop Geoffrey ; by the sub- John. stitution, for the system of jury assessment, of the direct valuation of the justices; and by the great expansion of the system of fines, which drove the barons into rebellion. Some of these measures Hubert might have connived at, but we can scarcely suppose that he would have taken the chief part in originating them. He had probably held the supreme financial authority as long as he could conscientiously exercise it. He resigned it by express command of Innocent III.

II. Judicial The minutir of the judicial measures of Hubert's measures. administration are not less important than those of the fiscal ; but they are simpler and more distinctly indicative of progress. The first act to be noted is the direction for the judicial iter of 1194, which has been several times referred to already. ${ }^{1}$ The first clause of this document directs the process of electing the grand jury of Election of grand jury. each county. Four knights are to be chosen from the whole county, who by their oath are to choose two lawful knights of each hundred or wapentake, and those two are to choose ten knights of each hundred and wapentake; or, if there be a lack of knights, ten lawful and free men ; so that those twelve may together answer on all heads, for their whole hundred or wapentake. It is necessary for the understanding of this direction to recur to two points in the legislation of Henry II. ; the Assizes of Clarendon and Northampton, ${ }^{2}$ and the institution of the Great Assize. ${ }^{3}$ The two former measures constitute what may be called by anticipation the grand jury, the inquest by twelve lawful knights of each hundred, and four men and the reeve from each township, into cases of reputed criminals in the hundred, with a view to the presentment of the guilty to the itinerant Extension of justices. Such is the character of the body instituted in its powers. 1194, but its functions are extended to all the business of the judicial visitation. How this representative body was under the assizes of 1166 and 1176 constituted we are not told ; but it is most probable that the lawful knights [^82]were simply nominated by the sheriff in the same way as Introduc. the recognitors for the assizes of mort d'ancestor and dar- clective the rein presentment ; ${ }^{1}$ it is, however, just possible that they prininiple were elected ${ }^{2}$ in the local assemblies, in which case the reform now adopted must be referred to earlier practice. But it is in the ordinance of the Great Assize that the closer parallel to the direction of 1194 is to be found. According to that institution the twelve recognitors are to be nominated by four summoned knights of the shire in which the disputed property lies. ${ }^{3}$ In that case the selection is removed by one step from an arbitrary selection by the sheriff and placed in the hands of a body of four. In the direction of 1194 then, first, the practice of electing through four representatives is extended from the Great Assize to the grand jury ; secondly, by the interposition of a second act of selection, the four knights are to choose two who are to co-opt ten ; that is, the selection is placed two steps instead of one only from a simple nomination. A further point, which is of importance, is the recognition of four knights as a sort of representative quorum of the county court for these purposes.

The use of the word election for the process by which Election or these four knights were singled out leads to a further question. Are we to understand that they were chosen in the court of the wapentake and county, or that they were mere nominees of the sheriff? I have already said that the probability is that in the selection of lawful men to act as recognitors in assizes of mort d'ancestor and darrein presentment, although the word eligendi is used, we are to understand that the choice was made by the sheriff only. Those recognitors were required only for the particular case for which they were summoned, and there seems to be no reason to suppose that the shiremoot or hundredmoot was called together on purpose to elect them. The sheriff had a list of the knights, and ways of ascertaining the names of the lawful men of the district, and summoned out of them those most likely to be well informed as to the matter in hand. And the same course was probably, if not certainly, adopted in the selection of the four knights who nominated the recognitors of a great assize. We may conclude that the great balance of probability is in favour of the practice of simple nomination as in use under Henry II.

[^83]as jurors for an inquest are at the present day.
${ }^{2}$ The word eligendi is used. Glanvill, xiii. 3.

If, however, we look on to Magna Carta, we shall find that the principle of election in and by the county court was in 1215 the rule in all cases of the sort. By the 18th clause, recognitions of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, and darrein presentment, are to be taken in the county courts only, on a particular day, and in a special place, four times a year; that is, instead of having a special nomination of recognitors at the discretion of the sheriff for each case, all such business is to be concentrated in quarterly courts of the whole shire, But further, these assizes are to be taken by the king's itinerant justices, with the assistance of four knights of each county chosen by the county court. Here, then, the principle of election is clearly stated, and the concentration of the assizes at the county court of course made that plan of election as certainly feasible as the earlier practice of holding them at the discretion of the sheriff, or of the curia regis, made it difficult. A similar rule is laid down in clause 48 of Magna Carta for the inquiry into forest grievances by twelve sworn knights of each county, to be chosen per probos homines ejusdem comitatus.

This being so, at what period between 1176 and 1215 are we to look for the transition from the principle of nomination to that of election? We naturally should fix it at the point of time at which the special assizes Point of for which the knights representative were required were from transion concentrated in the county court; and that appears natection to definitely to be the assize of 1194 now before us; the second chapter of which specifies among the capitula for which the grand jury is to answer, all recognitions and all pleas which have been summoned before the justices by the writ of the king or chief justice, or sent before them from the chief court of the king; whilst the 18th article includes the cases of great assize also, where the land in dispute is below a certain value. Not only is there no extant assize earlier than this, in which the principle is laid down, but there is the strongest possible ground for believing that no such document was issued between 1176 and 1194. I think then we may with This point great probability conclude that when the word eligendi $i \begin{aligned} & \text { may be fixed } \\ & \text { to the e fear }\end{aligned}$ is used for the appointment of the four knights of the shire, for the purpose of nominating the grand juries of the hundreds, it means that they were elected by the county court, as the 18th clause of Magna Carta describes, and as the later parliamentary representatives were chosen.

A further argument in the same direction may be Institution drawn from the 20th article of the assize of 1194 ; which directs that in every county shall be chosen three knights and a clerk, guardians of the pleas of the Crown. This direction is the origin of the institution of coroners, who have always been and still are elected by the whole body of the freeholders.

The creation of this new office, an elective office, and Institution one which relieved the sheriff from a considerable portion of his work, indicates a disposition on the part of the justiciar to limit the sheriff's direct exercise of judicial functions, which is in strict accordance with the proposed examination into his fiscal exactions, to which reference has been already made more than once, and which was intended to be carried out this very year. It would VOL. IV.

Oath of the peace, in 119 ั.

Revival of an earlier custom. the sheriff's office for their own purposes was too strong to be overcome by the mere personal and official changes carried out by Henry II; and that it was necessary to introduce an organic modification of the functions of this ancient magistrate. The time was not come at which the county court could be trusted to elect the sheriff ; ${ }^{1}$ the only alternative was to limit his functions. It will be seen on a general survey of the whole history of local administration, that as the elective principle gained ground the powers of the sheriffs were limited. The present assize not merely throws a large part of their duties on the elective coroners, but forbids that the sheriff shall be justiciar in his own sheriffwick, or any county in which he has been sheriff since the coronation of Richard. Magna Carta forbids that any sheriff, constable, coroners, or other royal bailiffs, shall hold pleas of the Crown.
The oath for the conservation of the peace ordered by Hubert in 1195 to be taken by all men throughout the kingdom ${ }^{2}$ is a valuable illustration of the permanence and adaptability of one of the very ancient legal customs of the country. The laws of Canute direct that every man above twelve years shall make oath that he will neither be a thief nor cognizant of one; ${ }^{3}$ the assize of Clarendon was based upon the obligation of this oath, although it devolved the execution of it upon a select body of knights and lawful men. It is now revived in the earlier form : they shall swear that they will keep the peace of our lord the king to the best of their ability ; that they will not be thieves, or robbers, or receivers of them, nor in any matter consent to them ; that when they learn the existence of such criminals, they will do [^84]their best to take them and deliver them to the sheriff; that when hue and cry is raised they will follow, and will deliver to the sheriff those who refuse or avoid the duty. This oath is to be taken by all over the age of Knights fifteen before knights assigned for the purpose. These the conserknights assigned appear to be the lineal predecessors of the peace. the more modern justices of the peace. The legislation of the reign of Henry III. incorporated the system of the assize of arms with that of watch and ward and hue and cry, and the whole of the measures existing for the conservation of the peace were codified in Edward I.'s statute of Winchester. The assigned knights of whom we read here for the first time become under Edward III. able to try felonies, and are called justices of the peace. There does not seem to be any ground for the assertion that these were at any period elective functionaries.

These are then the judicial measures of Hubert Iter of 1198. Walter's justiciarship. The directions for the iter of 1198 , issued soon after his resignation, contain no important change, unless the order that the elections for the great assize shall be taken before the itinerant justices may be regarded as a repromulgation or extension of the application of the elective principle to that process, which is unnecessary. The forest assize, reissued at the same time, varies but little from the assize of Woodstock of 1184.

The principles which may be regarded as definitely Summary of worked out for the first time in the archbishop's general the consl administration are, the application of direct taxation to of Hubert's radministrapersonal estate and revenue ; the employment of assess- tion. ment by jury to determine the obligation of the cultivated lands to carucage ; the introduction of the representative principle into the county administration on a scale hitherto unprecedented; and the application of the elective process to the selection of judicial representatives. That the last was not a mere accident or coincidence may be shown, I think, from the fact that the first extant charter of a town which contains the provision for the election of its ruling magistrate is that of Lincoln, of 1194. ${ }^{1}$ This privilege, which had been at an earlier period purchaseable by fine for the particular occasion, is now made perpetual, and a precedent for a large class of similar charters in the early years of the next reign, during which the archbishop's influence with the king was the strongest. But this opens up a subject far too complex and extensive to be touched here.

III. The light shed by Hoveden, following the direction taken by his predecessor, on questions of foreign history, was the subject of several pages of the preface to the second volume of this edition. ${ }^{2}$ The general statements made there I shall not repeat, but content myself with pointing out the passages which specially illustrate the value of the work in this regard.

History of the imperial family in Italy and Sicily.

1. The places which touch upon the history of the emperor Henry VI. are numerous, and though not of first-rate importance, decidedly valuable in the comparative barrenness of the continental authorities of the period. The chief of these are, the account of the coronation by Celestine III. ${ }^{3}$ and of the consequent destruction of Tusculum, ${ }^{4}$ derived probably from the canons of York who were then at Rome, or from the members of Eleanor's retinue who had visited the city at that time ; the particulars of the internal dissensions of the German princes, which are brought out in the history of the negotiations of Richard for his release ; ${ }^{5}$ the hostile attitude of the emperor towards France, which partly resulted from Richard's release, and was partly the purposed effect of his diplomacy; ${ }^{6}$ the cruelties and outrages committed by Henry in the Sicilian kingdom in 1194; ${ }^{7}$ the German crusade of $1197 ;$ the reverses of the imperial

[^85]arms in Sicily the same year ; ${ }^{1}$ and the illness and death of Henry himself, followed by the collapse for the moment of all his dynastic plans in both Germany and Italy. ${ }^{2}$
2. The history of the empire, as distinct from the History of personal history of Henry VI., is illustrated by the of Otho IV. account of the election of the emperor Otho IV., ${ }^{3}$ and his subsequent struggle with Philip of Swabia, as well as by the precedent notices of the adventures of the children of Henry the Lion. As William of Winchester, the younger brother of Otho, was brought up in Enggland, and resided at the court of Richard during a part at least of the later years ${ }^{4}$ of our chronicler ; as the intercourse moreover between Otho and Richard, although not between Otho and John, was continuous and friendly, it is easy to account for the special value of these particulars in the prevailing barrenness of the foreign writers of the time. The details of Otho's election, although not above legal and antiquarian criticism, are of great authority. Of the commissioners who attended on Richard's behalf, the bishop of Durham, Philip of Poictiers, was, in all probability, in constant intercourse with Roger of Hoveden, living at Howden, and having been as a royal clerk or chaplain acquainted with him in earlier years ; another, William de Chimili, was archdeacon of Richmond; another, the count of Aumâle, was the great potentate of the East Riding. From one of these, or from some person in the retinue of one of them, our author must have received his information; it is even possible that he himself attended the bishop of Durham on the occasion. ${ }^{5}$
3. Hoveden's contributions to the history of the History of papacy are not so large as might be expected from the the papacy. continuous communication existing during his period between York and Rome ; the most important, perhaps, are the accounts of the attempt made by Celestine III. to influence the choice of his successor, ${ }^{1}$ and of the early reforms of Innocent III. ${ }^{2}$ He has, however, preserved one detail of considerable importance touching the municipal condition of the city of Rome, the history of the change in the senatorship in 1194, with the short review of the previous condition of that magistracy. ${ }^{3}$

4. French history is so closely connected with English during the whole reign of Richard and the portion of John's reign which is embraced by the chronicle, that it is unnecessary to point out any special passages that throw light upon it. The measures taken by Philip to obtain a divorce, ${ }^{4}$ his dealings with the Jews, ${ }^{5}$ and his conduct of the quarrel between the university and citizens of Paris, ${ }^{6}$ are the best instances of our author's contribution to the separate history of France. of purely Scottish history, the transactions of William the Lion with Harold MacMadit, ${ }^{7}$ and his negotiations for the marriage of his daughter with Otho of Saxony, ${ }^{8}$ are specially noticeable. Hoveden's exact details on the subject of the homage at Lincoln in 1200 and the negotiations that led to it, are very valuable. ${ }^{9}$ So is also his story about William's intention of invading England at the beginning of John's reign, an intention which he gave up in consequence of a dream or vision which he had when spending the night at Dunfermline, the burial place of his greatgrandmother, S. Margaret. ${ }^{10}$ The statement of our author ${ }^{11}$ that in the year 1197 the king of Scots introduced into his dominions the oath for conser-

[^87]vation of the peace which had been prescribed in England $\underset{\substack{\text { Imitation of } \\ \text { English }}}{ }$ in 1195, may seem startling to those antiquaries who in- institutions sist that the English reforms in law and police had been anticipated by king David, and were in fact borrowed from him by Henry II. ; but there can be no doubt that it is a statement that throws light on a very obscure subject, and affords a glimpse of the process of imitation by which Scotland was assimilating herself to England in matters of the sort ; a process which continued until the wars of Edward I. threw her upon the French alliance, and caused her to adopt the French in preference to the English constitutional principles of law and government.
6. The few obscure notices given by Hoveden, of the Scandinaaffairs of Norway under Swerre Birkbain, ${ }^{1}$ are important chiefly as showing a certain amount of national intercourse, and of the interest that still existed in England as to the history of the northern kingdoms.

These instances will be, I think, sufficient to show Other hisboth the value of our Chronicle, the painstaking exact- trations. ness of its author, the soundness of his means of information, and the amount of intelligence as to foreign affairs which prevailed around him. The notices of Spanish and Oriental history are of less importance, and have, although recorded within a very few years of the time at which the events occurred, acquired from distance a tinge of the legendary character which diminishes their value.

The relations of the several Manuscripts used in the Relations preparation of this edition, are not for the last portion of the work very different from what they were in the third division of it.

MS. A. (Laud 582) continues to bear out its character MS. A. of the original and most perfect draught. From it the whole of the present text is taken. The only apparent characterized by omissions. into the text of D. and I. Another insertion printed by Savile from the Laud MS., the history of the philosopher Secundus, although certainly not Hoveden's, but added long after his time, on a spare leaf, from the Speculum Historiale of Vincent of Beauvais, I have thought it best to retain in a note; ${ }^{2}$ and with it a curious and garbled extract from John of Salisbury, which Savile omitted, although it is written in the same hand. Every consideration that I have been able to apply to this precious MS., has conduced to strengthen my conviction that in it we have the most authentic representation of our author's work, and in all probability the original MS. of it from the year 1181 onwards.

MS. B., the Arundel MS. 69, retains also to the end the character of a fine and close reproduction of the text of A., with the same important exception, an increasing tendency to omit letters and documents, more especially those connected with Archbishop Geoffrey's history. In some few cases moreover the writer of MS. B. has supplied the blanks left in MS. A. for proper names ; but with the exception of the Coventry letter he has added nothing.
MS. C. frag. MS. C., Arundel 150, towards the end of the work mentary. becomes more faithful to the exemplar represented by MSS. A. and B. ; but its arrangement is so fragmentary and disjointed that it is useless for the purpose of collation.
$\underset{\text { of B. }}{\text { MS. copy }}$ MS. D., Cotton Claudius B. 7, bears to B. the same relation that $B$. bears to $A$., that is, it is generally a faithful copy, but towards the end of the work the omissions and abridgments are more frequent, and the [^89]hiatuses more glaring. MS. D. omits many of the ms.D.omits northern details that are retained by MS. B, and adds northern nothing. The two long paragraphs from this MS. which tions. I have given in the note on pages 190, 191, are curious only as not being, so far as I am aware, referable to any known chronicle from which they could have been extracted. They are found in MS. D. in the same hand as the rest of the text; and in MS. C. are added in a modern one. They could hardly be Hoveden's on any theory.

MS. G., Harl. 3602, does not, as the work approaches ms. G . less its close, maintain the character of a faithful and intelli- $\begin{gathered}\text { valuarale } \\ \text { towars is }\end{gathered}$ gent reproduction of MS. A. It is sufficiently near it to show that the writer was not indebted to any other example; but the abridgments and omissions become more frequent and more arbitrary, so that for several important documents, copies of which might be looked for here, we have no other text but the Laud MS. It is unnecessary to particularize these, as they have been all pointed out in the notes.
The index of geographical forms which follows the Index of text and precedes the general index, has been drawn up phoical as carefully as I could do it without giving special dissertations on each questionable word; and has been added as almost indispensable for the ordinary reader. In the identification of the names I ought to acknowledge my obligations especially to Mr. Hodgson Hinde's index to Symeon of Durham, to Mr. C. H. Pearson's valuable series of maps illustrative of English History, and to Mr. King, the editor of Murray's Handbooks of Yorkshire and other counties. It should be understood that this index does not profess to be an exhaustive enumeration of the places in which the particular forms are found.

In the preparation of the General Index I have General attempted, not, I fear, very successfully, to carry out the ${ }^{\text {Index. }}$ plan of Mr. Luard in his Index to the Annales Monastici.

The work was one of considerable labour, but it will probably never have to be done over again.

To the Rev. C. W. Boase, M.A., of Exeter College, I may be allowed here to express my gratitude for the interest which he has shown and the advice he has given me, in the process of the work.

I have appended a long list of errata and corrections. I fear they are many more than the most indulgent critic would admit to be venial. As, however, the object of a good edition is not to prove the editor infallible, but simply to present his author in the best and purest form, I hope that the reader will allow the acknowledgment and careful correction of the errors to counterbalance the original fault.

xxiii. It is not quite clear that the Stephen de Turonis of Benedict and Hoveden is identical with either the Stephen de Marzai of Richard of Devizes, or Stephen of Turnham. In the note to p. 3 I have suggested that they were the same person, but there are considerable difficulties in the identification, and on the whole it is safer not to do so without new evidence.

Canute, duke of Sleswick, and king of the Obotrites, the father of Waldemar and grandfather of Ingeburga, was a different person from S. Canute, king of the Danes, father of Count Charles of Flanders. Robert Friso, count of Flanders, was father-in-law of S. Canute of Denmark who died in 1086. It is probable that Philip's counsellors had made the same mistake, for no other colourable account is given of the connexion between the houses of Denmark and Hainault. There is in J. P. de Ludwig's Reliquia, vol. ix. pp. 591650, a long pedigree of Ingeburga. S. Canute of Denmark was great uncle to S . Canute of the Obotrites, but it was through his wife, a Flemish princess, that he was connected with the count of Hainault, and that connexion was extinguished by the death of Count Charles. The following is a sketch of the pedigree :-

Comes autem Henricus de Campania, qui per electionem regum Franciæ et Angliæ, et Templariorum et Hospitalorum, præerat terræ Jerosolimitanæ, exercitum Christianorum paravit ad obsidionem illam solvendam: et dum ipse nixus columnæ cujusdam fenestræ in thalamo superiori, loqueretur ad turbas, fracta est columna illa, et ille corruens in terram, fractis cervicibus exspiravit. Saraceni vero ceperunt Jopen, et interfecerunt in ea plus quam viginti millia Christianorum. Post obitum vero Henrici comitis de Campania, dux de Luvain et Henricus dux Saxoniæ ${ }^{1}$ receperunt se in civitate Accon; sed nihil possederunt extra portas civitatis, et nihil victus potuit eis afferri propter metum paganorum. Cum autem hæc imago Crucifixi esset humi prostrata et spinis circumsepta, feria sexta facta est in agone, et ${ }^{1}$ apparuit facies ejus suffusa rubore vehementi, velut esset in camino ardenti; et sudor magnus exivit a facie ejus, et ab oculis ejus cadebant guttæ, ac si fleret: hora autem diei illius sexta, a dextro illius latere et a dextra illius mamilla exivit sanguis et aqua; quæ ministri ecclesiæ diligenter colligentes, miserunt legationem post Johannem Cumin archiepiscopum suum, mandantes ei hujus rei eventum sub sigillorum venerabilium virorum testimonio, domino papæ insinuandum. Cæteri autem episcopi Hiberniæ, licet sæpius legissent,

Henricus Romanorum imperator obiit.

Henry VI. sends bishop Savaric to propose a compensation to Richard for his ransom.

Eodem anno Henricus Romanorum imperator, facta reconciliatione cum uxore sua et magnatibus Siciliæ, incepit ægrotare, et misit Savaricum Batoniensem episcopum, consanguineum et cancellarium suum de Burgundia, ad Ricardum regem Angliæ, et obtulit ei recompensationem pecuniæ quam de eo ceperat pro redemptione sua, sive in auro et argento, sive in terris. ${ }^{2}$ Dum autem prædictus Savaricus iret in ista legatione,

[^118]predictus Romanorum imperator obiit in Sicilia apud Messanam, in vigilia Sancti Michaelis, excommunicatus a Coelestino papa propter captionem et redemptionem Ricardi regis Angliæ; et ideo prohibuit idem papa ne corpus illius sepeliretur, licet archiepiscopus Messanæ ${ }^{1}$ pro eo multum orasset. Venit itaque prefatus archiepiscopus ad Cœelestinum papam tribus de causis. Prima, ut corpus imperatoris sepeliretur ; secunda, ut Marcho- Negotiawaldus, summus imperatoris justitiarius, liberaretur ab obsidione Romanorum, qui eum obsederant in Marchia with the Guarneri, non permittentes eum inde exire; tertia, ut Fredericus præfati imperatoris filius coronaretur de regno Siciliæ. Ad primam vero petitionem respondit dominus Coelestinus papa, quod non permitteret corpus imperatoris sepeliri, nisi de consensu regis Angliæ, et nisi pecunia, quam ipse de rege Angliæ ceperat, redderetur. Ad secundam petitionem respondit dominus papa, quod prædictus Marchowaldus per ipsum liberari non poterat, ${ }^{2}$ nisi de voluntate Romanorum. Ad tertiam The pope petitionem respondit dominus papa, quod consentiret, $\begin{gathered}\text { consents to } \\ \text { tio corona- }\end{gathered}$ si fratribus suis cardinalibus placeret, ut Fredericus deerick os $\begin{gathered}\text { tion }\end{gathered}$ præfati imperatoris filius coronaretur de regno Siciliæ. John of S. Paul as his successor; prium patrimonium Sancti Petri ; de quibus ipse, ut supradictum est, constituit Fredericum, Henrici Romanorum imperatoris filium, regem.

Deinde dominus papa Coelestinus ante Natale Domini paulatim cœpit ægrotare, et convocatis coram se cardinalibus universis, precepit ut tractarent de successore suo eligendo. Ipse enim nitebatur modis omnibus, ut dominus Johannes de Sancto Paulo, presbyter cardinalis tituli Sanctæ Priscæ virginis, ${ }^{4}$ ei succederet in papatu: de cujus sapientia, sanctitate, et justitia plurimum confidebat. The cardinals refuse the proposal papatu, si cardinales consentirent in electione prefati Johannis de Sancto Paulo. Gaufridus Eboracensis archiepiscopus venit ad Ricardum regem in spe pacis faciendoe, sed non perfecit.

The dean and canons of York arrive after this,

Eodem anno Gaufridus Eboracensis archiepiscopus venit in Normanniam per mandatum Ricardi regis Angliæ fratris sui, in spe pacis faciendæ cum rege. Rex namque misit pro decano et canonicis Eboraci, ut venirent ad eum in Normanniam, volens pacem facere inter archiepiscopum et illos; sed archiepiscopus ille, antequam canonici venirent, fecit pacem cum rege fratre suo; ita quod rex concessit illi plenariam archiepiscopatus sui restitutionem, et præcepit Roberto capellano suo transfretare in Angliam, una cum magistro Honorio clerico et officiali prædicti archiepiscopi Eboraci, ad interesse prædictæ restitutioni. Archiepiscopus autem ille dedit magistro Honorio archidiaconatum de Richemund. Promiserat enim rex archiepiscopo, quod de cætero non impediret donationes suas. Et quia decanus et canonici Eboraci ad terminum statutum non venerunt coram rege, nee sufficientem pro eis miserunt

De consecratione Innocentii papce.

Eodem anno, Dominica prima Quadragesimæ, Inno-
Feb. 15 centius, Romanæ sedis electus episcopus, consecratus est Romæ apud Sanctum Petrum in Romanum pontificem, ab Octoviano ${ }^{1}$ Hostiensi episcopo, xvto. kalendas Martii ; et statim post consecrationem illius, præfectus et senatores, et tribuni urbis, et cæteri Romani, exegerunt ab eo reditus et consuetudines, quas prædecessores sui Romani pontifices eis impendere solebant: quibus ipse $\begin{gathered}\text { He quarrels } \\ \text { with the }\end{gathered}$ respondit, se hoc nunquam facturum, quoniam si fecisset, Romans. contra Deum et in præjudicium Romanæ ecclesiæ faceret. Quod Romani audientes, irruerunt in bona ipsius, et diripuerunt ea, et ipse excommunicavit eos.

Eodem anno, mense Martio, Hugo de Nunnant, ${ }^{2}$ Co- Hugh of ventrensis episcopus, obiit in Normannia apud Bec Mar. 27. Herleuin, ${ }^{3}$ die Parasceues Domini, sexto kalendas Aprilis, et ibidem in coenobio monachorum sepultus est: cui successit in episcopatu Coventrensi Gaufridus de Mus- Geoffrey de champ, archidiaconus de Cliveland, dono Ricardi regis Mishonof Angliæ, et consecratus est Cantuariæ ab Huberto Cantuariensi archiepiscopo.

Cruel treatment of prisoners.

Richard makes new alliances among the nobles of France and Flanders.

Eodem anno, mense Augusti, Ermengard regina Scottorum peperit filium suum primogenitum, et vocatum est nomen ejus Alexander; ${ }^{1}$ quem Jocelinus venerabilis ecclesiæ Glascuensis episcopus baptizavit.

Eodem anno, finitis treugis quas rex Franciæ et rex Angliæ statuerant inter se, donec segetes hinc et inde colligerentur; statim exarsit eorum nefanda rabies, et postpositis omnibus colloquiis hostiliter intravit uterque alterius regnum, et depopulando terras eorum prædas abduxerunt, ${ }^{2}$ homines ceperunt, villas combusserunt. Rex autem Franciæ novum genus grassandi in populo reperiens, fecit quamplures de hominibus regis Angliæ, quos captivos tenebat, excæcare ; et sic provocabat regem Angliæ, licet invitum, ad consimile impietatis opus.

Eodem anno dux de Luvain, ${ }^{3}$ et comes de Brene, ${ }^{4}$ et Baldewinus comes Flandriæ, ${ }^{5}$ et comes de Gynes, ${ }^{6}$ et comes Boloniæ, ${ }^{7}$ et Gaufridus comes de Pertico, ${ }^{8}$ et comes de Sancto Egidio, ${ }^{9}$ et comes de Blais, ${ }^{10}$ et Arturus comes Britanniæ, et multi alii, relicto rege Franciæ, adhæserunt Ricardo regi Angliæ, jurantes ei, et ipse illis, quod nullam pacem cum rege Franciæ facerent, nisi de communi eorum consilio. A.D. 1199. January. A truce for five years between Richard and Philip.

Angliæ ore ad os: et alium statuerunt sibi diem colloquii, ubi in majori suorum audientia, mediante domino Petro de Capua, Sanctæ Mariæ in Via Lata diacono cardinali, ${ }^{1}$ et apostolicæ sedis legato, nec non et aliorum utriusque partis magnatum consilio, statuerunt inter se treugas ab illo festo Sancti Hilarii per quinquennium, bona fide et sine malo ingenio duraturas, rebus et tenementis sic se habentibus ex utraque parte, ut tunc erat; et his factis, sacramentoque confirmatis, unusquisque reversus est in regionem suam, et permiserunt exercitus suos cum gratiarum actione in patrias suas redire.

Marchadeus surprised by the French.

Cum autem Marchadeus cum ruta sua versus patriam suam rediret, quatuor comites de regno Franciæ, per quorum terras Marchadeus transiturus erat, occurrerunt ei in manu hostili, et confecerunt eum, et multos de suos interfecerunt. Sed rex Franciæ factum illud devovit, jurans quod per illum factum non fuit. Hubert Walter is made Chancellor.

Hubertus Cantuariensis archiepiscopus coronavit et consecravit in regem Angliæ præfatum Johannem ducem Normanniæ, in ecclesia Sancti Petri apud Westmuster, sexto kalendas Junii, feria $\mathrm{v}^{\text {ta }}$, die Ascensionis Domini; Philippo Dunelmensi episcopo appellante, ne coronatio illa fieret in absentia Gaufridi Eboracensis archiepiscopi, totius Angliæ primatis.

Eodem die coronationis suæ, Johannes rex accinxit y Willelmum Marescallum gladio comitatus de Striguil, et Gaufridum Filium Petri gladio comitatus de Exsex : ${ }^{2}$ qui, ${ }^{3}$ licet antea vocati essent comites, et administrationem suorum comitatuum habuissent, tamen non erant accincti gladio comitatus: et ipsi illa die servierunt ad mensam regis accincti gladiis. ${ }^{4}$

Eodem die coronationis suæ idem rex dedit Huberto Cantuariensi archiepiscopo cancellariam suam; qui dum gloriaretur in potestate illa, et multa jactaret de familiaritate regis, Hugo Bardulfi respondit ei ; " Domine, " nominis vestri potentiam, et honoris dignitatem, non Interim Willelmus prior de May, et Walterus prior The Soottish de Insula Sancti Columbæ, et Willelmus de Haia, missi Nonvysclaimim ex parte Willelmi regis Scotiæ, ad Johannem regem berland and Angliæ venerunt. per quos rex Scottorum petiit a rege land. Angliæ Northimbriam et Cumbriam, cum pertinentiis eorum, de jure patrimonii sui: et promisit quod, si rex ea reddidisset illi, fideliter serviret ei viribus totis; sin autem, ${ }^{1}$ totum jus suum, si posset, adquireret. Quibus John delays Johannes rex respondit: "Cum dominus vester rex ${ }^{\text {his answer. }}$ " Scottorum, carissimus consanguineus meus, ad me ve" nerit, quod justum fuerit faciam ei, de ista et de aliis " petitionibus suis."

Deinde Johannes rex Angliæ misit Philippum Dunelmensem episcopum obviam regi Scottorum, sperans quod ipse ad mandatum illius veniret; et ipse interim venit ad Nothingham, et fuit ibi die Pentecostes, et in partibus illis moram fecit, exspectans adventum regis Scotiæ. Rex autem Scotiæ venire noluit; sed remisit ad regem Angliæ Rogerum episcopum Sancti Andreæ, et Hugonem Malebise, quos rex Angliæ pro illo miserat, et petiit ut rex Angliæ sibi redderet Northimbriam et Cumbriam : sin autem, ${ }^{2}$ pro certo sciret quod secundum posse suum illa adquireret: et ad habendum $\frac{\text { The Secots }}{\text { raise an }}$ inde responsum regis Angliæ posuit inducias quadra- army. ginta dierum, et ipse interim magnum congregavit exercitum. Episcopus vero Sancti Andreæ et Ricardus Malebisse secuti sunt regem Angliæ ad mare properantem.

Interim Johannes rex Angliæ tradidit Willelmo de William Stuteville Northimbriam et Cumbriam, cum castellis chantryed et comitatibus in custodia que Hugo Bardulfi custo- with Northdierat, et reddidit Rogero de Lasci, constabulario Ces- berland.

Eodem anno orta est gravis dissensio inter scholares et cives Parisius; cujus origo talis fuit. Erat itaque Parisius quidam nobilis scholaris Teuthonicus, ${ }^{2}$ qui erat unus electorum in episcopum de Legis. ${ }^{3}$ Hujus serviens, cum in taberna vinum emeret, verberatus est, et vas suum vinarium fractum est. Quo audito, factus est concursus clericorum Teutonichorum ; et intrantes tabernam vulneraverunt hospitem domus, et plagis impositis abierunt, relinquentes eum semivivum. Factus est ergo clamor populi, et commota est civitas, ita quod Thoma prepositus Parisius, cum plebe civitatis armata armatus, fecit insultum in hospitium clericorum Teutonichorum; in quorum conflictu nobilis ille scholaris, qui erat unus de electis in episcopum de Legis, interfectus est cum quibusdam suorum. Eodem anno obiit ${ }^{2}$ Maguntinus archiepiscopus, qui in civitate Magunti receperat Philippum ducem Swaviæ in dominum, et eum ibidem in regem coronaverat. Quo defuncto, clerus et populus civitatis elegerunt sibi quendam nobilem clericum ${ }^{3}$ de suis in archiepiscopum, et præsentaverunt eum Philippo ${ }^{4}$ duci Swaviæ; quem ille refutans, voluit contra voluntatem illorum unum de consanguineis suis ibi constituere archiepiscopum. Unde clerus et populus Magunti plurimum indignati, abjecto duce Swaviæ, adhæserunt Othoni regi Alemannorum, et receperunt eum in dominum ; et ipse ad præsentationem illorum recepit electum quem elegerant in archiepiscopum. Et ipse Otho fuit apud Maguntum in Natali Domini in regem coronatus ab eodem archiepiscopo Maguntino. Quo audito, Philippus dux Swaviæ præcepit sibi afferri thesaurum suum, quem habuit in partibus illis. It is written in a hand about half a century later than the rest of the text in A., and is no doubt an insertion made at the end of the year on a blank leaf. It is an extract from the Speculum Historiale of Vincent of Beauvais, lib. x., cc. lxx., lxxi.; but is given here as printed by Savile from MS. A., and as being referred to sometimes as the work of Hoveden. See Fabricius, Bibliotheca Graca, i. 866 .

De Secundo philosopho et ejus pertinaci silentio.

Temporibus Adriani floruit Secundus philosophus, qui philosophatus est omni tempore silentium servans, et Pictagoricam vitam ducens. Hic enim adhuc parvulus ad discendum missus, audivit in scholis verbum hujusmodi, quod omnis mulier fornicatrix esset et impudica. Tandem in philosophia perfectus remeavit in patriam suam, communem gerens peregrinationis consuetudinem, baculum et peram circumferens, coma capitis et barba prolixa. Hospitatus est in domo propria, nemine domesticorum eum cognoscente, neque propria matre; volensque probare de mulieribus, si verum esset quod audiverat, vocavit unam ex aucillis, promittens ei decem aureos, si persuaderet matri ; at illa consentiens ancillæ, vespere fecit eum ad se introduci. Cumque illa æstimaret se cum illo carnaliter debere commisceri, ille velut propriam matrem amplectens, inter ubera illius dormivit usque ad mane. Mane autem, cum vellet egredi et discedere, illa apprehendens eum ait, " Ut me tentares hæc fecisti." Qui dixit, "Nequa" quam, domina mater; neque euim dignum est, me illud vas maculare " unde exivi." Illa autem sciscitante quis esset, respondit, " Ego sum
"Secundus filius tuus." Illa recogitans in semetipsa, et non ferens confusionem, exanimata est. Secundus vero, sciens quod per loquelam suam mors matri contigisset, hanc a se in posterum exegit pœnam, ne amplius loqueretur ; et sic usque ad mortem taciturnitatem conservavit. Circa vero idem tempus Adrianus imperator veniens Athenas, andivit de illo, eumque ad se venire faciens, prius eum salutavit; ille autem tacuit. Tunc Adrianus ait, " Loquere, philosophe, ut a te aliquid addiscamus." Illo autem in proposito silentii perseverante, Tyrpon vocans quendam spiculatorem ait, "Hunc nolentem loqui imperatori vivere nolumus. Abduc eum, et tor" que." Adrianus denique spiculatorem latenter evocans, ait, " Loquere " ei in via, et persuade ei ut loquatur ; et si quid persuasus respondeat
" decolla eum : si vero non responderit, reduc eum ad me." Ducebatur autem Secundus a spiculatore ad locum tormentorum. Qui dixit, "O "Secunde, quare tacens morieris? loquere et vives." Sed ille vitam suam parvi pendens, mortem tacitus exspectabat. Spiculator itaque ducens eum ad locum destinatum, ait illi, "Extende cervicem, et suscipe in eam " gladium." Ille extendens cervicem, silentio vitam postposuit. Apprehendens igitur eum, venit ad Adrianum, dicens Secundum usque ad mortem tacuisse.

De hiis quœ ad interrogata scripto respondit.

Tunc Adrianus admirans philosophi contumaciam, dixit ei, "Quia lex " ista silentii, quam tibi ipse proposuisti, nullo modo solvi potest, sumens
" tabulam istam, scribe, et saltem manu tua loquere." Accipiens Secundus tabulam scripsit in hunc modum: "Ego quidem, O Adriane, nihil te
" timeo, quia princeps hujus temporis videris existere; me quidem audire
" [occidere V.B.] potes, sed vocis meæ proferendæ nulla tibi potestas est." Adrianus itaque legens, ait: "Bene excusatus es. Sed adhuc quædam tibi " problemata propono, ut ad hæc mihi respondeas : quorum primum est, " 'Quid est mundus ?'" Ille rescripsit, "Mundus est incessabilis circuitus,
" spectabilis supellex, multiformis formatio, æternus tenor, circuitus sine
" errore." "Quid est Oceanus?" " Mundi amplexus, terminus coronatus,
" hospitium fluviorum, fons imbrium." "Quid est Deus ?" " Immortalis

The same hand which has transcribed the story of Secundus, continues with the following supposititious letter, which Savile did not print. The heading only is a forgery, the rest being an extract from John of Salisbury, Policraticus, lib. viii. cap. 23.
" Adrianus episcopus, servus servorum Dei, Johanni Salesberiensi, fami-
" liari suo, salutem et apostolicam benedictionem. Iste Johannes, Anglicus

" papam Adrianum dicentem quod Romano papa nemo miserabilior est,
" conditione ejus nulla est miserior. Fatebatur enim in eadem sede tantas
" miserias invenisse, quod facta collatione presentium ad preterita, tota
" presens jocunditas et felicitas sibi fuit amaritudo respectu vitæ presente,
" dampnosam enim dicebat cathedram Römani pontificis, in tantum acutis-
" simis usquequaque consutam aculeis, tantæque molis ut robustissimos
" premat terat et diminuat, humeros, coronam et frigium clara merito
" videri quia ignea sunt. Asserebat quoque se nunquam a natali solo
" Angliæ malle exisse, aut in claustro Beati Rufi apud Valenciam perpetuo
" latuisse, quam tantas intrasse angustias, nisi quia Divinæ dispensationi
" reluctari non auderet. Hoc etiam sæpissime mihi adjecit, quod cum de
" gradu in gradum a claustrali clerico per omnia officia ad summum ponti-
" ficium ascendisset, nihil unquam felicitatis aut tranquillæ quietis vitæ
" priori adjectum est, et ut verbis ejus utar, ' In incude,' inquit, ' et malleo
" semper dilatavit me Dominus, sed nunc onerı quod infirmitati meæ im-
" posuit, si placet, supponat dexteram, quoniam mihi importabile est.'
" Nonne miseria dignus est qui pro tanta pugnat miseria ? Sic ditissimus
" qui est dominus sequenti die pauper erit, et infinitis fere creditoribus
" tenebitur obligatus. Ambire ergo summum pontificium, et non sine
" fraterno sanguine ad illud ascendere, est Romulo succedere in parricidiis,
" non Petro in ovibus pascendis. Bene ergo dicitur non tam nuncupative
" quam etiam substantive, Summus Pontifex, servus servorum, servit enim
" servis avaritix, id est, Romanis : necesse est adeo ut nisi servierit, fiat
" aut expontifex aut ex-Romanus." This is found also in Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Historiale, lib. xxix. c. iii., whence the copyist probably took it.

The dean of York refuses to admit the archbishop's nomine to deaconry of Cleveland.

The arch-

Honorius, archdeacon of Richmond, complains of the archbishop to the pope.

Quo audito, cum Gaufridus Eboracensis archiepiscopus præcentoriam illam uni de suis dare vellet, non permiserunt decanus et capitulum ; sed invito archiepiscopo, dederunt Hugoni Murdac archdiaconatum de Clivelande, quem idem archiepiscopus pridie dederat magistro Radulfo de Kyme, officiali suo ; et cum archiepiscopus vellet mittere eum in stallum vice precentoris, dixit ei decanus, "Non est vestrum mittere quenquam " in stallum, nec hunc mittetis, quia nos auctoritate " Lateranensis concilii dedimus archdiaconatum illum." Cumque archiepiscopus pro voluntate sua in his procedere nequivisset, excommunicavit Hugonem Murdac.
Interim Honorius archdiaconus de Richemund Romam profectus est, propter injurias quas Gaufridus Eboracensis archiepiscopus ei fecerat ; qui, contra antiquas archidiaconatus de Richemund dignitates et consuetudines, vendicabat sibi institutiones ecclesiarum et synodalia. Dicebat enim archiepiscopus, quod idem Honorius omnia ista ei resignavit, et carta sua confirmavit. Contra quod Honorius modis omnibus veniens, conquestus est domino papæ Innocentio de injuriis quas ei fecerat Eboracensis archiepiscopus, et litteras ab eo in hunc modum impetravit. ${ }^{1}$

The justices attempt in vain to enforce the assize of measures at S. Botolph's fair.

Eodem anno Hugo Bardulfi, et alii quidam justitiarii regis, venerunt ad nundinas Sancti Botulti, volentes capere in manu regis pannos laneos qui non habebant duas ulnas de latitudine infra lisuras, secundum assisam Ricardi regis. Quo audito, mercatores effecerunt adversus predictos justitiarios, quod panni eorum non capiebantur, et quod diutius non teneret assisa illa Ricardi regis, neque de latitudine pannorum, neque de mensuris bladi ; et ut liceat eis de cætero facere pannos suos latos vel strictos sicut eis placuerit. duximus audiendos. Fuit ex parte archiepiscopi memorati propositum, quod institutio personarum et custodia ecclesiarum vacantium ad eum in diocesi sua spectat, tam de jure " communi quam ex consuetudine generali. Verum quidam " prædecessores ipsius quibusdam archidiaconis tam institu" tionem quam custodiam personaliter commiserunt, eas sibi " alicujus tempore retinentes, et libere, sicnt spectabat ad " eos, utentes eisdem ; ita quod archiepiscopus, qui Eboracensi " ecclesiæ modo præest, quondam ${ }^{1}$ archidiacono Richemundiæ " illas ad preces inclytæ recordationis Ricardi regis Anglorum " de gratia speciali concessit; et eo in episcopum post electo " sibi retinuit tanquam suas. Cumque archidiaconatum illum " prædicto magistro intenderet assignare, tam ante concessio" nem quam in concessione ipsius expressit, quod tam insti" tutiones sibi quam custodias reservabat. Cui archidiaconus " ipse respondit, quod contra Deum ageret, et juri canonico " derogaret, si institutiones 'ecclesiarum sibi usurpare præ" sumeret, quæ soli archiepiscopo competebant. Archiepiscopus autem annuit " precibus postulantis, et tam institutiones quam custodias, " non personaliter archidiacono qui tunc erat, sed perpetuo, " de consensu Eboracensis capituli, archidiaconatui reali et " liberali concessione donavit. Hac sunt nomina baronum qui capti sunt in civitate Lincolnia in werra predicta.
Comes Wintoniæ Serlo, et Robertus filius ejus ; Robertus filius Walteri; Willelmus de Mubrai, et Robertus frater ejus; Gilbertus de Gant, et Mauricius frater ejus ; Gerardus de Fornival ; Robertus de Greili; Ricardus de Munfichet; Willelmus de Ros; Simon de Kinde; Robertus de Roppelege; Johannes de Bassingeburne ; Walterus de Tiwe ; Hugo de Renou, baro Franciæ; et comes Perticæ ibi occisus fuit ex parte illa, et Robertus de Tibbetot miles comitis de Ferreres occisus erat ex parte regis. Et cum istis baronibus capti fuerunt centum quinquaginta milites tam de Angligenis quam de Francis, quorum nomina fuerunt scripta, exceptis hiis qui securius et privatim undique adducti sunt per regnum. Isti autem evaserunt; Johannes de Laci, constabularius Cestriæ; Willelmus de Mandevile; Symon de Persi; Galfridus de Lucy ; et circiter sexaginta milites cum dextrariis sine armis. Et sciendum quod multi alii capti sunt pro voluntate et ad placitum quorum numerus ignoratur. Postea capti fuerunt comes Herefordiæ; Willelmus de Huntingfeud ; Gilbertus de Clare; Henricus filius comitis David, et multi alii infra villam; et tota civitas robbata infra ecclesiam et extra. Et sic cito postea terminata est werra et Lodovicus a sententia excommunicationis qua fuerat innodatus absolutus ab Anglia recessit et in Flandria applicuit. Valete.
